THE RETAIL FLORIST.....

FLOWERS FROM LODGES.

In a majority of the florists' clubs throughout the country it is the practice to send a design to the funeral of each member who dies. In some cases, the character of the design is left to the man who makes the piece, but a number of organizations have adopted a standard design, which is recognized as representative of the club. The design adopted by the Kentucky Society of Florists is shown in the accompanying illustration. It is a wreath on an easel. The wreath is composed of galax leaves, with carnations and valley. A similar piece is sent each time there is a death in the club membership.

One of the peculiar features of the plan adopted by this society is in relation to who is to make the design. The florist is not expected to donate anything, and it is the rule to follow the membership list in order to tell who is to do the work. The first time after the rule was adopted the work went to the first named on the alphabetical membership list. It had progressed as far as the name of Jacob Schulz in the present instance.

Many retail florists have achieved reputations as "joiners" simply for the advantage which lodge membership gives by gaining a wide acquaintance. Those who are lodge members often can get it arranged so that they have authority to send a designated floral tribute, recognized as representing the lodge, every time a member dies, without special action at a stated meeting.

FUNERAL WORK.

Notes on Set Pieces.

Continuing the discussion of the special features of set pieces, as certain designs are called, others besides those mentioned last week, the anchor, open book and broken column, have points which the design-maker must observe if his work is to be really first-class. It never should be lost sight of that one of the most important things in making a design is to always make the outline first, thereby assuring good shape. When it is possible to do so, it is always a good plan to use some small flower as an edging.

Crescent and Star.

A well made star and crescent is one of the prettiest of designs. The crescent can be trimmed in any one of many different ways. See that it tapers nicely to the points. The star should be made of some small flower, if possible. Often I have taken a carnation to pieces and used some of the petals. The star should not be too large.

The Cross.

A well made cross also makes a fine floral design. Often we find one not well proportioned; this, of course, is the fault of the wire man, but the florist gets the blame, and deserves it, if he lets it get by him. In a correctly proportioned cross, each cross arm and the top arm should be just one-half the length of the lower part, but if the three top arms are of equal length the lower part can be a little longer without looking bad; in fact, in some cases it makes a better appearance—for instance, in the case of a flat casket cross. When making up a cross see that you have neat, square corners and that the arms are in line.

In the case of a cross with a slanting bar, the bar should always slant upwards from left to right.

The Crown.

A crown is by no means one of the easiest designs to make.

In the first place, you must be careful when filling or mossing the design to carry out the nice lines of the piece. Some flowers like carnations or small asters or chrysanthemums can be used to form the crown. Little trimming is called for. If you have never made a crown of flowers, be sure you get a good price for the work, as you will use many flowers and much time.

Cross and Crown.

The cross and crown is not as common as some other designs, but nevertheless it makes a nice piece. The cross is the same as any cross. The crown can be fastened at either the point where the arms cross, or about halfway down on the lower part. The crown must be made up carefully, so as not to lose shape. You can use carnations for making the crown. A good plan is to take the carnation to pieces, or rather divide one carnation into several parts to form the points of the crown. In other words, use only part of one carnation wired to a toothpick in making the points.

Broken Wheel.

As in many other designs of a like nature, there is little chance for ornamentation on a wheel. Some dainty little flower radiating from the hub toward the rim always adds to the appearance of the piece. Then the rim can be trimmed prettily. A flower of different color stuck in the end of the hub sets that part of the design off. When a broken wheel is fastened to an easel, instead of standing on a base, see that none of the spokes is perfectly perpendicular or horizontal, as this looks bad.

Design Adopted by the Kentucky Society of Florists.

The Gates Ajar.

The gates ajar is one of the designs we are often called on to make. To give it a good appearance the two sides, or uprights, should be made a little heavier than the top. By using a darker flower on the uprights than above on the arch, you can also produce the desired effect. In case you do not make the gates solid, then a nice spray of green in each gate will add to the appearance.

The Harp.

While the harp is a pretty design when nicely made, it has many special features to look to. On a large harp I would suggest that you run a few flowers up among the strings to take off the bareness. First place a few lilies or open roses at the lower corner of the piece and then insert some loose flowers between the larger ones. Some florists have the strings bronzed by the wire man, but in my opinion they should be covered with chenille to match. There should not be too many strings and some people give a different and, I think, wrong meaning to the piece by showing some of the strings to be broken.

With the lyre it is about the same as with the harp. The strings should be nicely covered with chenille. Some flowers arranged in the lower part of the lyre proper, to take away the bareness, will add much to the effect.

The Heart.

You may not be called upon to make a heart as often as some other design, but a small heart is a pretty piece for a child's funeral. In making up a heart be careful at the top, where the flowers meet, that you do not crowd them; otherwise your design will not have a good shape. Also see that you run to a nice point at the lower end.

Maltese Cross.

In making up a maltese cross the wire man should not make the arms too wide in the center or the piece will look crowded when finished. You must also be careful to keep the flowers well in at this point. See to it that the corners of each arm are as sharp as it is possible to make them. Hugo Schroeter.

DECORATED WAGONS.

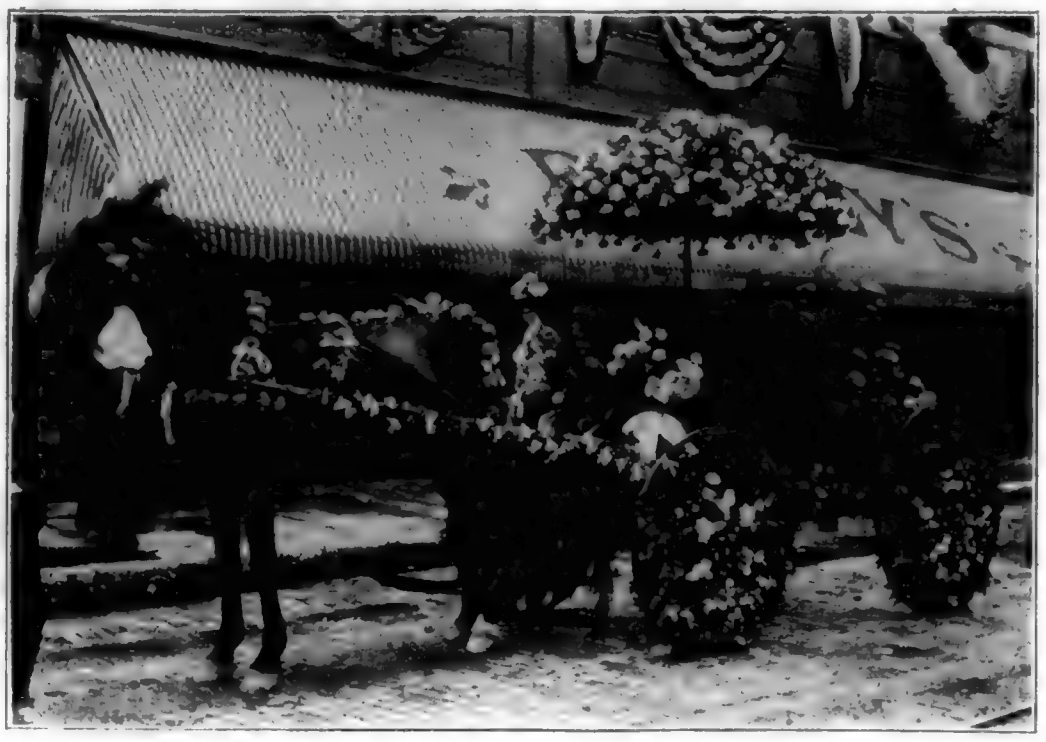
The accompanying illustrations show two of the vehicles of J. W. Dudley & Son, Parkersburg, W. Va., decorated for the large trades display which took place May 15. This was made the special feature of the United Commercial Travelers' Convention from four states and the District of Columbia. Dudley & Son were awarded first prize out of seventy-five firms who entered and were represented by floats. The small wagon used 3,000 roses and carnations. The larger wagon represented a landscape effect, with a carpet bed with lettering "U. T. C," the two wagons making a very creditable display.



Flower Bed on a Wagon for an Industrial Parade.

When asked if the effort paid in a business way, C. P. Dudley said: "Yes, it did. At the end of the parade we invited everyone to help themselves to the flowers. This was promptly accepted and in less than three minutes each float was stripped of every flower and plant. We found this only to be an appetizer, like a newsboy we have in mind, who went through his train and dropped a couple of peanuts in each seat, later passing through the car calling out, 'Hot roasted peanuts, 5 cents a bag,' and doing a big business. Those who were not lucky in the grab of course had to purchase."

AZALEAS AT GHENT.

At the recent centenary exhibition at Ghent, Indian azaleas were shown as they can be shown nowhere else in the world. There were many hundreds of plants, some of great size, all arranged most attractively—not a pot showed. One important class was to illustrate the several styles of training, and one of the most noteworthy classes was that for a collection of fifty plants cultivated as espaliers (fan-shaped), and the premier award, consisting of a gold medal, was made, with the felicitations of the jury, to A. Haerens, Somergem, who had finer examples of this style of training than those included in his group arranged for effect. The plants ranged from two to three feet across, and were finely flowered on both sides. These examples, by reason of their novelty, attracted much attention from those of the English visitors who are interested in greenhouse plants. The varieties were much the same as those represented in the round-headed plants of the usual type, and it would therefore appear that all the finest varieties are suitable for this style of training. L. Van Houtte Pere, Ghent, was a good second with well developed plants, but with flowers on one side only.

Pyramidal trained plants were of great excellence, and the class for twenty-five specimens was a remarkably strong one. Sander & Sons won the work of art offered as the premier award. The plants were about three feet high, finely proportioned, and superbly flowered. In the class for 100 pyramids, Victor van de Weghe, Loochristy, was successful in obtaining premier honors, and the award of a gold medal was well merited. Of considerable excellence also were the fifty pyramids for which J. De Puysselyre was awarded a gold medal. The number of plants called for in these classes will give an idea of the extent of the display of the commoner round-headed plants.

A Half-Acre of Geraniums at the Arthur F. Coolidge Place, Cambridge, Mass.

THE BANKS OF THE CHARLES.

Arthur F. Coolidge has a farm of thirty-five acres in the outskirts of Cambridge, Mass., along the bank of the Charles river. The property has been in the family for three generations. Mr. Coolidge has eight greenhouses, in which his specialties are carnations, chrysanthemums and violets, but a large part of his extensive business is in bedding plants. The accompanying illustration shows a half-acre of stock plants of geraniums photographed last season. A ten-acre "meadow" of celery forms a part of the farm and supplies the Boston market from July to Christmas.

DISEASED GERANIUMS.

I send you by express today a package containing some geraniums. Please try to tell me what is wrong with them. I had the same trouble last year and lost hundreds of plants. The disease does not appear until this time of the year, when the stock should be ready to sell. It begins at the edges of the leaves, as you see by the samples, and continues until the whole plant is yellow. I have tried all kinds of soil, with or without manure, bone meal, etc. Have tried some of them in a warm house and kept some cool. I have also held them on the dry side and some of them wet. I sent some of them to the Department of Agriculture at Washington, D. C., last year. They never saw or heard of such a thing. I had them at our Florists' Club and they were discussed by the members, to no avail. There is nothing that I have not done or tried as to treatment, or to discover any carelessness on my part that might cause it. I have been growing geraniums for years and last year the disease made its first appearance. When planted out it makes the finest kind of a plant and does not show the disease. I have received so much valuable information through the REVIEW and you have helped others so much, that I now call upon you to see what can be done. G. J. L.

I have not before seen or known of any such trouble as this correspondent has. It would appear that he has tried about every mode of culture possible to combat the disease and it is difficult to make any suggestions which may help him. The trouble may be a new one, but I think it can be overcome if he will but discard his present stock and start in with new blood. Perhaps this may have been done. If not, I would certainly try it. Desperate diseases require desperate remedies and it will be much better to make a clean start again. It is just possible that the soil may be at fault. Why not send a sample to the chemistry department of the State Agricultural College? Tell them of your trouble and perhaps they can help you.

The geranium is, generally speaking, one of the easiest of plants to grow and flower, but many growers have no end of trouble with fungoid attacks on the foliage each year. Your plants are differently affected, and I think that either your stock has become debilitated or there is some element in the soil which causes the yellowing of the foliage. I hope that if any other REVIEW readers have been afflicted in the same way as G. J. L., and can suggest any remedy, they will come to his aid. C. W.

WEST CHESTER, PA.—George M. Huey spent a week recently in Atlantic City, N. J.

ASSESSMENTS ON STOCK.

Will you kindly let me know through the REVIEW if there is any taxation on plants in or out of the greenhouse? I noticed some time ago in the REVIEW that plants were not taxable and that assessment could not be enforced on same. Have you any decisions from any courts in regard to this matter? We have a smart farmer who happened to be appointed assessor by his farmer friend, and who of course knows it all, and who thinks that I must pay taxes on my stock of plants and business, and I call on your kindness to help me out with your valuable advice? L. A. G.

Usually an assessor or board of review can be made to take a reasonable view of assessments against greenhouse property and the growing stock, if the matter is presented to them in the right light and without the use of strong language. If any reader knows of a case in which a court has passed upon the question involved, the REVIEW will be pleased to hear of it.

PLANTING BULBS WITH MACHINE.

I never have planted a tulip or narcissus bulb bottom side up, so do not know what it would do. I have many thousands of bulbs, tulips and narcissi, to plant this coming fall and could fix my potato planter to plant with, if the position in which the bulbs were planted made no difference. Would it do any great harm if the bulbs happened to fall in the furrow bottom up or on their sides? L. S. S.

The narcissi and tulips will come up, even if planted on their sides or bottom upward. They will be later, however, than those properly planted. Both foliage and flowers will have a longer journey to reach the surface and can hardly be expected to bloom so early and evenly, or to be of as fine a quality as if set in the regulation manner. I would certainly not try the potato planting plan. Dropping by hand will take longer, but will give you much more satisfaction in the end. W. N. C.

SOOT AS FERTILIZER.

I note the answer to A. L. & S., on page 79 of the Review for April 9, on soot and other fertilizers. Now, I want to know the value of carbon as a fertilizer, that which is found in the bottom of large chimneys where there is a large range of boilers using soft coal. Would you call this soot?

G. B. B.

What you call carbon is usually known as soot. That of a black color coming from soft coal is of the greatest value. The light-colored substance is less valuable as a fertilizer, but should not be thrown away. Spread it on any of your land. If cutworms or wireworms bother you, it makes a valuable preventive if dusted over and around the plants. It is helpful if spread on lawns and you cannot go far wrong in spreading it broadcast among any of your crops. Good black soot is an excellent fertilizer for greenhouse plants, making the foliage of a dark, lustrous green color.

SEASONABLE SUGGESTIONS

Memorial Day Preparations.

With many florists the volume of business done at Memorial day far exceeds the sales at Easter. This is not at all surprising. On May 30 practically every family remembers to decorate in some way the graves of those whom they have loved and lost. Started with the object of decorating in a moderate way the last resting places of that noble army who saved the Union, the fast diminishing remainder of which must soon pass to the great beyond, it has far outgrown the idea of those who gave the movement birth. It would seem that every year the volume of business is heavier and, in spite of depressed conditions, we fully anticipate a heavier call this year than ever before.

The wide temperature fluctuations which are usually characteristic of May will make it necessary for growers to exercise considerable care in order to time their crops correctly. Such useful staples as Spiræa Japonica, ten weeks' stocks, snapdragons, candytuft, feverfew, marguerites, gladioli, Spanish iris and lilies, all of which will be under glass, come on rapidly now and, as the blooms start to expand, should be grown cool. Some shade on the glass will lower the temperature and preserve the flowers.

White flowers, while they will sell for Memorial day, do not bring as remunerative prices as colored ones; scarlet and pink shades in carnations, roses, tulips and other seasonable flowers are always snapped up quickly. With many of these flowers it will be better to cut and place them in large jars of water in a cold room or cellar, where they will last much better than on the plants.

In addition to cut flowers, which in the forms of bouquets and wreaths of moderate price are always in heavy call, many customers will purchase geraniums, pansies, forget-me-nots, daisies and other bedding plants. If these are in small baskets or flats, which can be readily handled, they will sell all the better. The bedding plant season in the northern states may be said to fairly commence with Memorial day, and growers should place their best bloomed and most salable plants in batches arranged so as to take the eyes of any prospective purchasers. Hydrangeas, nicely flowered, are good sellers at this time. Be sure they are well soaked with water, and always instruct those purchasing them to water liberally.

Bedding Out.

While we may still have a few cool nights, and the possibility of light freezings are to be reckoned with, there are many who will want their flower beds planted before Memorial day. If your stock has been well hardened there is no reason why such plants as geraniums, verbenas, Drummond's phlox, lobelias and the like, cannot be set out with safety.

A few points to be remembered in bedding out are these: Beds and borders should be well spaded over and enriched with rotted manure, except in the case of geraniums, which want a rather poorer soil, heavy manuring promoting too much rank leaf-growth. Unless you have some fanciful carpeting design you wish to work out, where it may be necessary to raise the soil in the beds, keep the surface level. It may not look so well at first, but the benefits will manifest themselves as the warm weather arrives. When rains come they will soak the beds evenly, which is not the case when they are a foot higher at the center than the sides.

Be sure all plants are wet at the root before planting. He who sets out bedding stock with dust dry balls, and figures on a soaking from the hose or the skies giving them a good start, deserves to make failures. Always firm the ground thoroughly around each plant. Leave the surface soil loose, and try to keep it in that condition if you want to see the stock grow fast.

Avoid Messy Mixtures.

In bedding out we still see many attempts to get as many varieties and colors in one bed as possible. It is satisfactory to know that this practice is being gradually improved upon. With the constant decline in carpet bedding, in which variations in color are a necessity, and the adoption of more natural planting, the tendency is to use either solid individual colors to each bed or an edging of some other color for contrast. We prefer as much as possible to have each bed a separate color. The effect is far better and more satisfying. Particularly is this true of those popular flowering plants, cannas and geraniums. Do not use reds and pinks together or the contrast will be the reverse of pleasing. With cannas, a bed of scarlet edged with yellow looks well and the colors reversed are equally good, but a solid bed of Florence Vaughan or Bouvier is better than either arrangement.

Plants for Shady Locations.

Fuchsias do not flower here with the persistency and freedom characteristic of them in Europe. There they are features in many of the parks and gardens. Here, to succeed at all, a position with partial shade is a necessity.

Tuberous begonias are splendid bedders if they can have some shade. They like rich soil and if mulched with fine manure in summer they are splendid subjects. Many of the winter blooming fibrous-rooted begonias are also good, if they can be broken from midday sun, and bloom remarkably well. Under the shade of trees the showy Rex begonias will grow luxuriantly, provided the water supply is good.

Such fibrous begonias as La Vesuve or Vesuvius, Erfordii and Vernon will thrive in either sun or shade. Under the latter conditions the foliage will not take on that bronzy hue usually seen on plants exposed to the sun's full rays.

Pansies and violas, which make a brilliant show now, cannot be depended upon to flower all summer. If, however, they are well shaded, can be kept moist at the root, and seed pods are removed, they will bloom until late fall.

Mixed Foliage Beds.

While mixtures of flowering plants are not in good taste, beds of miscellaneous foliage plants, such as ficus, curculigo, pandanus, grevillea, the hardier palms, crotons and other plants of like nature, with groundwork of English ivy, alternanthera, santolina, Asparagus Sprengeri, variegated vinca and other low-growing plants are pleasing. In large beds, in addition to the plants named, musas, Dracæna indivisa, aralias, Pennisetum Ruppelianum, cyperus, ricinus and a number of other plants are of great service. The larger plants should not be set too closely together, but should have ample space to show their full individuality, lower growing plants being used between them.

Even with the foliage plants it is much better to keep the colored-leaved plants in beds by themselves, although tropical mixtures of foliage plants are more tolerable than those in flower.

Persistent Flowering Annuals.

An enormous quantity of annuals are used for bedding. A common query asked is, what annuals can I plant which will flower all summer long? There are a few varieties which can be depended upon. In rather poor soil nasturtiums are hard to beat. In rich soil they make rank growth and flower sparsely. Verbenas like well enriched soil and will bloom in it from June to November. Drummond's phlox will flower for several months. Stocks and asters make a glorious show while in flower, but two or three plantings are needed to keep a bed attractive the season through. With partial shade the nicotianas are splendid, flowering all summer. During sunshine the flowers close, but on dull days and evenings they are very showy. The hybrids of N. affinis are superior to those of N. Sanderæ. Dianthus Heddewigi flowers nearly all summer. Clarkias, godetias, eschscholtzias, nemophilas, schizanthus and other quick growing annuals can only be depended upon to make a showing for a few weeks. Petunias are perhaps the most satisfactory of all bedding annuals and will flower freely all summer.

Window-boxes and Vases.

There is always a big demand for plants to stock window-boxes and vases. Often the florist is, also, asked to furnish the soil. In this case be sure to make it liberal. Put good, rotten manure in the bottom and mix thoroughly through the loam. Remember that the small body of soil will quickly be a mass of roots, and unless it has been well prepared the plants will show the absence of food long before the season ends.

In boxes and vases it is better to use one solid color, although many like the popular variegated vinca as a drooping plant for everything. English ivy, Kenilworth ivy, Asparagus Sprengeri and quite a variety of other green-leaved plants may also be used to good advantage. Dracæna indivisa makes one of the best centerpieces for vases.

In palms the phœnix stands sun and wind better than any other sorts. Latanias will get yellow unless they have shade. Kentias will not stand heavy, thrashing winds, but in sheltered piazzas can be used to good advantage. With a moderate amount of shade the nephrolepis will do well, also many other ferns with moderately tough fronds.

Do not forget some scented plants when filling boxes or vases. Such varieties as heliotropes, scented geraniums and lemon verbena are universally popular.

Brief Reminders.

Another planting of gladioli in the open will now be seasonable. Use the cultivator among the early batches.

Apply a mulching of strawy manure to sweet peas. This will help to keep the roots moist and prolong the flowering season.

Be sure you reserve an ample stock of all bedding plants for your own use, and do not let them be the poorest leftovers.

Keep the cyclamens constantly stirred. In June remove them to a coldframe. Do not allow them to become potbound.

Pot along seedlings of gloxinias and tuberous begonias wanted for late summer blooming.

You can still put in some chrysanthemum cuttings. They will root fully as well in a coldframe as a greenhouse now. These and all other cuttings need frequent wettings overhead now the temperature is so much higher.

Plant out any early asters, stocks and other annuals being grown for cutting.

Keep the carnations, violets and perennial plants well hoed. The more you hoe, the faster they will grow.

Gradually harden off tender plants, such as cannas, coleus, crotons and alternanthera. Do not plant them out before June.

Propagate antirrhinums now if you want strong plants to flower next Christmas.

Look out for cutworms. Poison them with bran, powdered sugar and Paris green well mixed.

The time to prune deciduous shrubs is not now, but after they have done blooming.

Look out for aphis on roses, euonymus, hawthorns and other outdoor stock.

Do not leave empty flower pots lying on or under the benches. As you sell your bedding plants, stack the pots away. It means fewer breakages and a much neater place.

Jot down the names of bulbs, perennials and shrubs which you think will be useful for your future Memorial day trade.

Lily of the valley is a useful hardy plant. It prefers a little shade, but grows well in sun if the ground is rich and deep. If you are short of it, plan to set out a few rows next November.

Keep potting off the little Lorraine begonias as they root. Do not become discouraged at the slow growth they make at this season.

HOUSE OF FORMOSA LILIES.

The trade is much interested in the longiflorum lily bulbs from the Island of Formosa and welcomes this new source of supply for its promise of true stock. Because of this, the accompanying illustration is noteworthy. It is from a photograph supplied by H. F. Michell Co., Philadelphia, and shows a house at the establishment of Emil Lieker, a well-known forcer of Easter lilies at Lansdowne, Delaware county, Pennsylvania, to whom the Michell Co. furnished a quantity of the bulbs of the 1907 crop in Formosa. The photograph was taken April 7, 1908, and shows how well and evenly the stock had flowered. Mr. Lieker is a skillful grower, accustomed to good results, but he says this was as satisfactory a house of lilies as he ever flowered.

Last year the importations from Formosa consisted of only a few hundreds of cases, but this year the crop will amount to several thousand cases. The Formosa lily flowers in the month of February on its native island, or about two months earlier than the Bermuda lily. The bulbs are thoroughly ripened by the end of May, when shipments commence, which are expected to reach the importers at the end of July or the first part of August. The long rest the bulbs have until they can be potted is decidedly in their favor. The Formosa lilies should not be forced as hard as Harrisii, otherwise they grow too tall.

TEMPERATURE FOR GREENS.

This is to settle a dispute on the temperature for growing smilax and Asparagus plumosus. Can these be grown in a solid bench in a greenhouse where the temperature in the winter is sometimes 48 degrees for two or three weeks at a time and never over 52 degrees in the winter? What is the proper temperature to grow them in? G. K.

Asparagus plumosus and smilax can be grown in a solid bed at the temperature mentioned by G. K. However, this is decidedly too cool to obtain best results. Our experience tells us that these greens thrive best in a night temperature of 58 to 60 degrees, allowing it to run up to 70 degrees in the daytime. Albert F. Amling.

THE PLANTING SEASON.

Operation Must Not Be Delayed.

As the planting season approaches, we should see that everything is in order so that no time may be lost between throwing out the old stock and replanting with the new. Every day lost at this operation means a shortening of the growing season, and the growing period given to roses, as at present practiced, is short enough, usually dating from sometime in June up till October, when the young bushes are supposed to be able to bear a crop. This is a brief time in which to develop a good, thrifty bush. Rose growers are every year realizing the fact that houses which are planted in May or early in June produce the heaviest crops and that the cut is superior in quality to that from stock planted later. Where a system of record-keeping is practiced, this statement is easily verified.

Accompanying the actual work of emptying and refilling the benches there is always the more or less disagreeable and tardy work of repairing the benches. This work is always rather disagreeable to the ordinary greenhouse man, as he is not accustomed to it. It is tardy because, when we begin repairing, there is usually a good deal more to be done than is apparent at first sight; in fact, it often takes longer to repair an old bench than to build a new one.

Having all materials at hand and tools in good repair will make the work more pleasant and satisfactory.

The old fashion of expecting the ordinary help to complete the work of emptying and refilling is happily disappearing. The work of the greenhouse during the rest of the season unfits the ordinary help for this class of labor and, indeed, without calling on them for extra time it is impossible for them under such conditions to attend properly to their ordinary duties, and extra time during hot weather, and especially under glass, is enervating and no doubt tends to keep many a bright and capable man from devoting his life to the study of the "genteel craft."

Progressive employers nowadays are fully alive to the fact that it is more profitable to engage sufficient extra help to perform the heaviest part of the work and to have it done as expeditiously as possible and that the ordinary man can tire his muscles and brain sufficiently in a 10-hour day. ## RED SPIDER ON ROSES.

What is the trouble with the enclosed rose leaves, and the remedy? Only the foliage is affected. J. S. M.

The trouble is red spider, and in plenty. The remedy is syringing at every favorable opportunity, with a pressure of at least forty pounds to the square inch.

The branches and leaves show a weak growth. This may be due to the weakening effects of the ravages of this pest, but may also be due to want of ventilation.

Give plenty of air, lots of water and keep the syringe going. See that the under sides are thoroughly washed, as it is there where these insects congregate.

THRIPS ON BEAUTIES.

I am sending you by mail a small box containing seven buds of American Beauties. Nearly all my Beauties are forming buds like the sample I am sending you. I waited a little while, thinking the warmer spring weather would improve them. It may be that they have done a little better, but the buds are still very imperfect and are worthless for flowers. Will you kindly advise me what the trouble with them is, and how to remedy it? W. L.

These Beauty buds are badly infested with thrips, and so long as they are in the house you may expect a large proportion of the buds to be spoiled. As thrips love the heat, there is little probability of their decrease unless remedial measures are applied.

Light and persistent fumigation with tobacco fumes, applied late at night or early in the morning, will lessen their numbers. This fumigating, however, has a tendency to bleach the outer petals, making them unmarketable.

Fresh Cayenne pepper, applied in the following manner, if persisted in, will also subdue them. Heat some bricks or iron plates, and place through the house. Then start at the end farthest from the door and put a tablespoonful of the pepper on each brick or plate, and leave the house quickly, as the fumes are very irritating and even dangerous. Keep the ventilators closed for an hour.

Syringing occasionally with kerosene emulsion has also a deterrent effect.

As a preventive, keep all weeds and decaying matter well away from the outside of the houses, and keep the paths, as well as the ground under the benches and on the benches, scrupulously clean. This is a pest which requires time, patience and persistence to eradicate.

THE READERS' CORNER.

Creosote in Greenhouses.

I note in the Review of May 14 the remarks of Thomas H. White with regard to concrete slabs for bench bottoms. He concludes: "I should think it would pay to use the slabs even if wood supports were used, as the supports could be treated with some of the creosote preparations and would last a good many years. It is the bottom boards that need so much renewal."

I am specially interested in the reference to creosote, for I always have supposed that creosote, while a good preservative of wood, was injurious to plant life and that it could not safely be used about a greenhouse. I should like to hear, through the Review, from those whose experience gives them definite information on this subject. If there is any wood preservative that can be safely used, I think we all want to know about it. K. I. M.

White Fly.

I have noted in the Review several methods of fighting the white fly. I use and recommend the burning of damp tobacco stems, fumigating every other night for three fumigations. The first time add half a teaspoonful of sulphur for a house 20x100; for the second fumigation use two-thirds of a teaspoonful of the sulphur, and the third time use a whole teaspoonful. Using this every other night, it will not hurt the stock and is sure to kill the white fly.

Establishment of Ludwig Stapp, Rock Island, Ill.

LUDWIG STAPP'S PLACE.

The Tri-Cities Florists' Club is one of the most successful of the trade organizations of the middle west, for in its membership it numbers practically all the florists of the Tri-cities, as they are known, Moline and Rock Island in Illinois, and Davenport in Iowa. These prosperous cities afford an excellent business for a score or more of growers and retailers, and the greenhouse establishments there are most of them fine examples of their kind. All the growers do more or less retail business, but some of them also wholesale a part of their products. While a great variety of stock is grown, the wholesalers grow largely carnations, and this flower is almost a specialty at the establishment of Ludwig Stapp, at Rock Island, which is shown in the accompanying illustration. The picture shows a well-kept place and it is interesting to note that Mr. Stapp has within the last few weeks placed an order for the material for a much larger house than any of those shown in the picture, which is to be erected this spring. Business is good enough with him so that he thinks he needs as many more carnations as he can plant in a house 51x160, the first wide house to be built in that section.

Carnation growers will be especially interested in the fact that Mr. Stapp is an advocate of watering the carnation plants while in the field and last summer equipped a plot of ground 60x300 feet to give the plants water without effort whenever they did not get rain. He says he found the watering a great benefit in dry spells, and especially good after planting, particularly when the weather turns dry and windy. In such case he turned on the water after finishing a day's planting and says it refreshed the plants like a shower. Mr. Stapp goes to some little trouble to get his water, pumping it from two wells, one 140 feet deep and the other 200 feet. He drives the pumps with a two-horse power electric motor, pumping into a cistern, from which the water is again pumped by a two-horse power combination pump and engine such as has been sold to many growers by the Standard Pump & Engine Co., of Cleveland. This forces the water into a large pneumatic tank which gives a pressure up to 100 pounds; but the tank does not hold the pressure above thirty to forty pounds when he is operating more than one line of the watering system. However, as he has the pipes arranged, thirty pounds' pressure enables him to cover the ground.

In piping his field Mr. Stapp ran a 1¼-inch pipe from the greenhouses to the center of the patch. From there he carried two lines to the right and two lines to the left, each 150 feet long, Each line can be cut out with a valve and controlled with a swivel wheel, but all the lines could be operated at once if water could be supplied a little faster by the tank. It would then take a 2-inch flow, or 2½-inch, to feed all the pipes at once. In the lines the first fifty feet are 1¼-inch pipe, the next fifty feet 1-inch pipe and the last fifty feet ¾-inch. Mr. Stapp thinks it would work better if he had the first seventy-five feet 1¼-inch. The Wittbold nozzles are ten feet apart, sixty nozzles on the 600 feet of pipe.

After Mr. Stapp gets his carnations off the field he uses the land for a fall crop of lettuce and spinach.

CARNATION NOTES.—EAST.

Field Culture.

Whatever may be the plan for care of stock during its stay in the field, it is imperative that we be well equipped with tools for cultivation of the soil and that we possess muscle and determination to carry out the work thoroughly.

From much that has been published in various journals, one might be led to believe the degree of thoroughness in cultivation to be determined by the depth to which the soil is stirred, when, as a matter of fact, the benefits to be derived depend on the time when the work is done and the amount of thought put into the work.

All deep cultivation should have been done at the time of plowing, and it may be said in this connection that an extra day spent at that time in thoroughly fitting the land will greatly reduce the amount of elbow grease to be expended later.

Use of Hand Cultivators.

Some growers, especially those of the old school, remark with fine scorn on the impracticability of hand cultivators, but in spite of that their superiority over those drawn by horses is being shown each year by their increased use among those growers who appreciate the advantages to be gained.

Since the plants can be more closely set, less land is required. Consequently there is less labor in fitting and less area to be kept cultivated; also a saving in manure. These implements permit working close to the plant and, as they are adjustable in many ways, conditions can be so readily met that the use of a hand hoe is scarcely required. Our experience leads us to favor those provided with two wheels and designed to straddle the row.

Cultivation should begin as soon as the plants are set, to remedy the packed condition of soil incident to the work of planting. Those put out each day should be gone over before night.

It is surprising how many hold the opinion, or at least, by the appearance of their fields, give the impression that cultivation is needed only when weeds threaten to take full possession.

Frequency of Cultivation.

Rapid growth of weeds is an infallible sign of ideal soil and weather conditions, and the grower who frequently stirs the surface soil not only maintains growth in his plants during less favorable periods, but, in the destruction of weeds while small, preserves plant food in its most available form, thus throwing around his stock every inducement to make the growth which otherwise would have been appropriated by the weeds.

When one considers the few good growing days there are in a month, the importance of frequent cultivation is apparent.

Cultivate after every rain or even a light shower, as soon as the soil is in workable condition. Cultivate also after two or three nights of heavy dew. If there is time between, repeat; if not, take time and cultivate some more, but do not go deeply.

The first time over get the teeth well into the soil, but afterward about an inch is sufficient, the object being to prevent baking of the surface and consequent loss of soil moisture.

If from any cause a number of plants have died, remove them from the field at once, and apply this rule also during the summer when topping. Do not invite trouble by leaving the tops to decay.

Geo. S. Osborn.

CUTWORMS.

I mixed cow manure with my carnation soil and allowed it to rot before putting it in the benches last August. Last February I discovered a number of species of cutworm eating the blooms of several plants. They seem to be the most plentiful in some smilax which I have growing at the end of one of the carnation benches. Do you suppose that the worms were in the manure, or if not, what in your opinion was the cause of their presence? W. B.

The cutworms you complain of are no doubt one of the several kinds we meet with in the greenhouse and also in the field and are probably the ones which give carnation growers considerable trouble by eating the flower buds. This worm, like most of the grubs and cutworms, is found mostly in sod soil, as it feeds on either the roots or the foliage. You gathered them in your sod soil and not in the manure. You made no mistake in using cow manure and you could do nothing toward destroying the worms until they made their appearance as cutworms. When they began feeding, however, you could have gone after them with the following remedy and cleaned them out: Take a quantity of wheat bran and stir into it enough molasses to make it slightly moist and sweet. Then mix into this enough Paris green to make it poisonous and scatter around where you think the worms are. Put in a liberal amount of the Paris green, to make sure it is deadly. We have recently found that there is a wide variance in the quality of this common poison. Some we bought could have been taken by the spoonful without serious effects, apparently. A. F. J. B.

GET THE CUTTINGS IN.

There is still time to get in a large batch of chrysanthemum cuttings to grow to single stems. In fact, they can be propagated until the middle of June, although we prefer to discontinue this work about June 1. Of course the flowers produced from these late cuttings are not such as Mr. Totty might want to exhibit, but they will be found of a useful commercial size when in flower, something the markets are constantly calling for and such as your retail customers at home will buy. We like to pot off all our mums, but have transferred direct from the cutting bench to their flowering quarters and have had good success on every occasion. Be careful not to let your cuttings stay in the bench too long, until they become hard, or they will amount to very little.

Cuttings inserted during May and June will produce salable pot plants for fall trade. These are grown in a variety of ways. Some plant outdoors and lift; others plant in a bench, lifting late in August, while some prefer to keep in pots all the time. The last method entails more work, but gives the best plants. If lifted carefully from benches, the plants will suffer much less than if potted from the open ground. At the exhibitions last fall the new race of singles were very popular. As many of these make good plants, no commercial grower will go far wrong in trying a few.

HARDY CHRYSANTHEMUMS.

The sale of pompon chrysanthemum plants has increased rapidly of late years and this season the demand will be still further stimulated by the article sent out by the press bureau of the National Council of Horticulture for publication in its large list of daily and weekly papers.

Chrysanthemums of the pompon type, of which each plant produces from forty to 100 blooms, an inch or two across, are many of them hardy enough to remain out all winter in central and southern latitudes. The blooms often remain in good condition until Thanksgiving.

These plants are the most capable of resisting frosts of any flowers. Their peculiar merit is that they bloom long after successive frosts have denuded the landscape. The flowers are not ruined until their petals have been wet and frozen stiff. The plants are necessarily used for mass effects, as great size is not to be expected. Masses of red and brown side by side make a striking combination. Crimson and pink varieties should be kept by themselves, because their colors are variable and they make a violent contrast with the yellow.

The culture of hardy chrysanthemums is simple. They need little care and can be planted in any situation, so that the soil is rich. They are best propagated from cuttings, which should be made at any time up to May. They should be inserted singly in pots, or in sandy soil, and as soon as they are rooted they may be set outdoors in their permanent location.

THE WA-NO-KA GREENHOUSES.

Western New York is rich in the lore of the Indians and its nomenclature is largely that of the original Americans, who, while driven out by the white men, nevertheless left their impress upon the names of the localities. Wa-no-ka was an Indian maiden and the name means "just one of a kind." As adopted for the carnation growing establishment at Barneveld, N. Y., it is to be hoped that it is misapplied, for the kind is such an excellent one, and visitors are so favorably impressed, that it will be a loss to the trade if more of the kind are not developed.

The business was established some years ago by C. A. Nicholson and his son, H. H. Nicholson, under the firm name of H. H. Nicholson & Co. From the first the establishment was devoted exclusively to carnations. A. O. Grassl was secured as grower and in 1905 was admitted to equal partnership with H. H. Nicholson, C. A. Nicholson retiring, and since then the business has been conducted under the name of Wa-no-ka Greenhouses. The accompanying illustration shows the plant as it appeared one January day this year.

The establishment is kept in apple-pie order and the stock is uniformly good. None but the most up-to-date varieties are grown, but those seen in the average commercial establishment, producing cut blooms, have been largely displaced by seedlings raised since Mr. Grassl's connection with the business. They have a number of seedlings which may shortly be disseminated in the trade. Possibly the best of these is Apple Blossom, of which Willian Scott said, upon the occasion of his last visit, that the house reminded him of nothing so much as a field of ripening wheat. The flower is white, with the base of each petal shaded with pink. While it is not so large as Enchantress and some other varieties, it is of excellent commercial size.

THE FOUNDATION OF SUCCESS.

[A paper by B. T. Galloway, chief of the Bureau of Plant Industry, U. S. Department of Agriculture, read before the Horticultural Society of New York May 13, 1908.]

There are four special crops growing in this country, which in the order of their commercial importance are: (1) the rose; (2) the carnation; (3) the violet, and (4) the chrysanthemum. Although I have been gathering statistical data of one kind and another bearing on these crops for the past fifteen years, I am not sure just at present whether I am justified in naming the rose first, or whether it should not give place to the carnation. However, this is a matter aside from my subject, except as a way of introducing the fact that the violet, modest and sweet and without the queenly qualities of her competitors, stands third in actual value of cash returns for money invested.

Peculiarities of the Violet Business.

The violet business has some rather interesting and peculiar conditions associated with it. Like the growing of certain crops, the production of poultry, etc., there seems to be an idea prevalent among people who have tried many things and failed that the violet is one that they can take up without giving any great study to the conditions involved. It is not an unusual thing to find men who have all their lives been engaged in farming, or the trades, or commercial work, getting interested in violet culture, going into the business, and succeeding in an incomprehensible way for the first two or three years. Then, again, I suppose there are more women scattered through the country who have an idea that they can take up this business than almost any other connected with the growing of crops under glass. As a matter of fact, schoolmarms, clerks, lawyers, doctors, and various others who have, or think they have, opportunities of success, start out with a view to coining money in the production of and sale of violets. Doubtless much of this interest in the crop arises from the fact that it does not cost a great deal, comparatively speaking, to start the work. The violet is modest, not only in itself, but in a measure in its requirements, and although it is amenable to a great extent to good treatment, it will sometimes do remarkably well under indifferent conditions. I have pointed out in the course of my work with this crop that there are probably more failures in growing it than are to be found with any other plant produced under glass. This, to my mind, is not so much due to inherent difficulties in the crop itself as it is to the fact that so many inexperienced people undertake to grow it.

Looking back over the past fifteen years, it is of interest to me to note that of all the men who were successfully growing the violet, ten, twelve or fifteen years ago, there are few of them left at the present time. Some of these good people have branched out into other lines, but the greater portion of them have quit the business entirely. There are new growers coming on all the time, however, so that the market is not lacking for a supply of the flowers. Altogether it may be said in this connection that the trade in violets is practically holding its own. There has been no great increase in the demand for the crop, but there has been a wholesome and legitimate growth of the market, largely due to the increasing population of our cities and the demand for a flower which, when fresh and sweet, is always marketable.

There is one peculiarity about the violet that will always make it more or less in demand, and that is, the season for it is circumscribed within certain definite months. The carnation and the rose have long seasons; the chrysanthemum a short one, and the violet somewhat longer but still short when compared to the first two crops. By the middle of April or the first part of May the season for violets is over and then they disappear until the following October, so that there is a freshness and keenness regarding the demand for them each recurring autumn.

The Style of House.

Having now pointed out some of the essentials and fundamentals connected with the business, it is desirable that we shall consider the important factors which have to do with the success or failure of the work when it is conducted on a commercial basis. It is, of course, important that there shall be some kind of a house in which to grow violets. In the earlier days the violet was produced almost exclusively under sashes and in coldframes. As the demand for the flowers increased, however, it was found impracticable, especially in our northern climates, to grow the crop in this way. Gradually there was evolved from the coldframe the common dugout, a modification of the coldframe to the end of sinking a path in the center of the frame so as to give sufficient headroom for the worker to handle his plants and gather the flowers without being exposed to the weather. It was considered necessary to keep the plants close to the glass; hence the evolution of the violet was slow. Gradually, however, the sashes were raised and the houses were made higher on the sides. Coincident with this development came the change from the growing of the plants out of doors during the summer to planting under glass and growing them there the season through. I think probably the spot disease had more to do with indoor growing than any other one thing.

There are, of course, all kinds of houses, which only emphasize the statement already made as to the varying kinds of men and the varying kinds of conditions under which the violet has been forced to make its way into commercial work. In contrast to the houses in which there has seemingly been little regard for light, heat, or any of the modern requirements, in some comparatively recent establishments these things have had due consideration.

The Modern House.

The violet does not need a great amount of light during the hot months, and even in winter, where the sun is bright, it is often essential to have some shade; hence the grower, if he is in the violet business alone, does not need to give so much heed to the question of

[A synopsis of a paper by George E. McClure, read before the Buffalo Florists' Club, continued from The Review of May 14.]

Fertilizers.

Manurial fertilizers for cattleyas should be studiously avoided, especially when sphagnum moss has been used with the potting material, as it causes too rapid decomposition, with consequent decay of the roots. However, with the system here advocated it is well to use what is known as the Cookson formula, which is as follows: Three ounces potassium nitrate; two ounces ammonium phosphate, dissolved in three gallons of water. Use one liquid ounce of this solution to every gallon of water applied. If this fertilizer is used once each week during the growing season the plants will be much benefited.

Enemies.

The chief enemies of cattleyas are insects. The cattleya fly is unquestionably the most injurious of these enemies. It is a small insect and deposits its eggs in the young growths of the plant. As the growths develop the eggs hatch out and the larvæ feed on the developing growth, which is soon arrested and stunted. The fly then emerges and proceeds to deposit eggs in other growths. An abnormal swelling of the young growth is the first indication of the larval presence, and the affected growths must be sacrificed. Latent eyes or buds will start, but will not be as strong as the first growths. The judicious use of hydrocyanic acid gas should control this pest.

Next to the cattleya fly, the cockroach is the most injurious insect enemy. It destroys the flower buds and tender root tips. The roaches may be destroyed by a mixture of cornmeal and Paris green placed on the benches or between the pots. They may also be trapped in wide mouthed bottles containing a little sweet oil.

Thrips are also injurious to the young growths of cattleyas. Their presence is made known by the brownish appearance of the young growths. The trained eye may detect their presence before much damage has been done. The discoloration is the after effect of the injury done. To eradicate thrips, spray with Nicoticide or some other tobacco extract. A good plan is to spray the

THE DEATH ROLL.

William Scott.

William Scott is dead.

The news will be received in sadness by many thousands in the trade, for there was no man in our profession who was so widely known for his writings, nor has the literature of floriculture in America produced any other writer of equal power to make his readers feel the warm, personal qualities of the man who wielded the pen. During the nine years that Mr. Scott's notes were a weekly feature of the Review, from the date of its first issue until that later day when failing health made it no longer possible for him to contribute to the sum of human happiness and knowledge from out his great store of information, he was the most widely read writer for the trade press and the human qualities of his work appealed to his readers to such a degree that thousands who never had met the man will feel his loss to be a personal one, as of an old and intimate friend. Mr. Scott's versatility was a constant source of amazement to the editor of this paper, who early noted his ability and encouraged him to write more and more freely for the trade press. No question referred to him seemed to have been too complicated for him to answer, and many times matters outside of a strictly trade character were treated as ably as they would have been by a specialist, and in a far more practical and entertaining manner.

But Mr. Scott's crowning work was the Florists' Manual, published by the publishers of the Review, in 1899, which was promptly recognized as the standard treatise on the commercial side of the florists' business in America, covering practically every phase of the subject. So large and steady was the sale of the book that a new edition was found necessary in 1906. The revision for this was almost the last work for which Mr. Scott had strength, for shortly after its completion he suffered a stroke of paralysis from which he never recovered; while it did not dim his bright mind, it took from him the power for effort. He grew steadily weaker until the present month, when he was again attacked by paralysis, to which he succumbed at 7:20 a. m., Tuesday, May 19.

William Scott was born July 31, 1844, at Leigh Park, Hampshire, England, the country home of Sir George Thomas Staunton, one of the finest gardens in Europe, where his father was head gardener for twenty-seven years. He attended a private school in the neighboring town of Havant till he was 13 years of age, at which time the schoolmaster became insane, but as Mr. Scott, who delighted to tell the story, said after a pause, this was not his fault. He began work in the garden shortly after this and the first job he could remember doing for wages was weeding chrysanthemums that had been cut down after flowering and were standing in pots under the shelter of a hedge. At 15 years of age he had the care of a conservatory that had to be so scrupulously clean and neat that the petal of a camellia must not be seen on the snow-white paths or the trimly kept border. Among the plants in this old-fashioned house was a Phornium tenax some six feet across, oranges of various species or varieties that yielded bushels of fruit, an Acacia pubescens that went to the roof, and a grand specimen of Araucaria excelsa ten feet high and perfect in form, and still, such is the mildness of the climate of the south coast of England, more than one winter passed without the fires being lighted to heat this house.

In this beautiful garden were not only the rarest exotic plants, including for those days a grand collection of orchids, almost all the economic plants, and exotic fruits, grown to perfection, but the highest type of landscape art was exemplified. The beauty of the place attracted many visitors and Mr. Scott was privileged to see many of the illustrious men and women of Europe who came there to enjoy that beauty.

When the subject of this sketch was 17 years of age his father removed to Chichester, where he rented the Northgate Nurseries. Mr. Scott worked in the nursery, greenhouses and seed store of his father till the spring of 1868, except for two years during which he was employed in the seed store of W. H. Rogers, of Southampton, famous as a most estimable man and as a good grower of rhododendrons. In the spring of 1868 a spirit of adventure came over the young man, his brother, Alex, and his friend, E. I. Mepsted. Canada was settled upon as the place to which to emigrate, but the good father said: "Boys, the United States is the place for you, and I have many friends there." James Fleming, then in partnership with Peter Henderson, was one of the old Leigh Park men. Robert Buist, of Philadelphia, and Mr. Brackenridge, of Baltimore, were old associates of the elder Scott in Edinburgh. David Ferguson, of Philadelphia, was another Leigh Park man, and there were others in the United States.

The watering can was thrown down one Saturday night in March, with the expectation that it was never to be handled again, and the trio were off for the backwoods of Canada to trap and hunt and get in close communion with the redmen of the primeval forest. A look at the forest, about three miles up Yonge street, Toronto, was enough for the party, and through the kindness of George Leslie, the nurseryman, the party was quickly back at the old trade. The following winter Mr. Scott was in the employ of James Pape, who grew plants for the Toronto market. The summer of 1869 they tried market gardening and the seed business in Stratford, Ont. There were too many in the firm, as was evidenced during the dull months when the gross receipts of the day amounted to not over $1.25. So they paid their bills and through his old friend, George Vair, Mr. Scott engaged with George Bailey, of Buffalo, who was then one of Buffalo's most prosperous manufacturers and was building a fine private place. Mr. Scott was "imported" to work for him in 1870.

In 1876, through the declining business of his employer, he was almost compelled to rent the houses, quite a little commercial growing having been done in the preceding two years. These houses he conducted profitably for three years, but in the second one he secured the property on Balcom street, where he lived for more than three decades. Mr. Scott always spoke modestly of his establishment as of but moderate size, but while this may be true to a certain extent, his place always ranked with the larger ones and nowhere were plants and flowers better grown. Quality always was sought rather than quantity, and the former was found to pay better than the latter, though Mr. Scott came pretty near getting both.

William Scott.

A beautiful note in Mr. Scott's character was his sincere affection for his excellent wife. In referring to his early struggles in business he freely accorded her the credit for his success, and said that without the help of his most true and loving helpmate he never could have accomplished what he did.

Mr. Scott carried on a general florists' business in Buffalo, the home place being almost in the geographical center of the city, but after a few years the demand for more stock caused him to acquire a piece of acre property at Corfu, a few miles outside the city, where a range of glass was put up for cut flowers. The business covers all the various divisions of the trade and, together with his early training, this accounts for his familiarity with such a wide range of subjects. This being supplemented by a wonderfully retentive memory and a peculiarly happy, clear and graceful style of composition, made him the most valued contributor to the trade press. The art of telling a great deal in a few words was possessed by Mr. Scott to a remarkable degree. But his popularity does not rest solely upon his writings. He believed in visiting his fellow craftsmen, and traveled extensively. He was good fellowship personified and to meet him was to feel he was your friend, if you were worthy of such friendship. We question if anyone in the trade was more generally known or more universally esteemed than William Scott.

Mr. Scott was an active participant, up to the last couple of years, in the affairs of our trade societies. He was president of the Society of American Florists in 1896 and his ready wit, coupled with his grasp of the situation, made him a prominent figure in the annual conventions of that society, the Carnation Society, and other trade bodies.

In speaking of himself, Mr. Scott has said: "I do not wish to be judged by what I am worth, but by what I have earned and done," and one of the chief accomplishments of his life, and that of Mrs. Scott, was the raising of a splendid family. As the sons grew to manhood they assumed the father's business cares, both at the city place and at Corfu, where David Scott now lives with a fine family of his own. R. A. Scott manages the home place. The business was incorporated as the Wm. Scott Co. about five years ago, when the boys took the active management. One son, Phil Scott, went to Denver several years ago and eventually started in the retail business for himself. One daughter also survives, with the widow, and there is a sister, Mrs. Henry Sadler, at the old family home at Chichester, England.

The funeral will be held today, May 21, and will be attended by the Buffalo Florists' Club in a body and by many members of the trade from outside Buffalo.

We wish the weather man would "Push Dem Clouds Away" and give the planters a chance.

When printed letter-heads cost so little, it is a great mistake for growers to write on plain paper and thereby create a doubt as to whether or not they are entitled to trade prices.

All the European horticultural periodicals are reprinting the paper on hybridizing, by Alex Dickson, of Newtownards, presented before the American Rose Society at its Chicago meeting.

R. Vincent, Jr., of White Marsh, Md., was the representative of the United States at the centenary flower show at Ghent, Belgium, at the end of April. If any other Americans were present, they do not figure in the reports.

A large English firm says that Fuchsia Alice Hoffman is undoubtedly one of the best for bedding or pot work. It is of compact habit, dwarf, with charming small flowers, sepals brilliant carmine, corolla white. The fuchsia is enjoying a well deserved return to popular favor.

The retail florists have no right to put upon the wholesale florists the burden of the long credits said by some retailers to be a necessary evil in their business. No retailer is justified in granting credits larger than his own capital and margin of profit will provide for.

The general report is that the orders placed with the Holland bulb salesmen are much smaller than last year—but the bulb men should not despair. A goodly number will consider that, as everyone else is cutting down, it may be as well for them to reinstate their own full order.

It is stated that fan trained azaleas have become popular in Belgium and France. They are grown specially for the window and balcony, and are admirably adapted for placing on brackets in large rooms and in corridors. When well-bloomed on both sides they are decidedly effective.

At the great centennial exhibition at Ghent, Belgium, April 25 to May 2, Nephrolepis Amerpohlii was awarded the premium for the best new fern.

Secretary Albert M. Herr, of the American Carnation Society, has issued the annual "Proceedings" of the society, being a stenographic report of the seventeenth annual meeting, held at Washington, D. C., January 28 to 30, 1908.

The Great Central Market.

There has been only one brief period of fair weather in the week which has elapsed since last report. During the interval in which the sun shone, the revival of spirits in the market was pronounced, for it fell on Saturday, when local trade is always strong, and a big business was done, even if at about the cheapest prices of the season. It has rained so continuously since the beginning of May that it has put an effectual damper on the market, as it has, indeed, upon all lines of trade in any way affected by the weather. Memory is proverbially short in such matters, but no one remembers a time when we have had so long a period of unfavorable weather at so inopportune a season. The production of cut flowers is large in spite of dull skies, and growers are anxious to prosecute the work of field planting, especially of carnations, while those of the retailers who do bedding out and similar work find it impossible to make progress in what usually is their busiest month.

The market was overloaded steadily last week, and even on Saturday and Sunday, with pleasant weather, it was impossible to wholly clean up, although the load was lightened to the smallest proportions of the fortnight. Monday and Tuesday reverted to the condition suited only to ducks and the market at once relapsed. There is too much of everything, because there is no real demand for anything. Both roses and carnations are in oversupply and the quality is deteriorating rapidly, as a result of the long continued rainy weather. Roses are soft and many show the ravages of thrips, as do a considerable proportion of the pink carnations. White carnations often are received in a practically unsalable condition, the petals already having turned brown. It is only possible to move the bulk of the receipts through job lot sales at unquotable prices. At the same time it is necessary to charge good prices to a buyer who wants really first-class stock, because it is necessary to do a great deal of sorting to get out such orders.

There has been a reduction in the supplies of sweet peas, although there still are fully as many as trade demands. Easter lilies also are shortening and prices are likely to advance with a slight increase in the demand. Callas are approaching the end of the season. Violets are practically out of the market, only a few locally grown Marie Louise being available. Lilac has been abundant this week, but the rain has done it much harm. Outdoor tulips also have been spoiled to a large extent. Lily of the valley is again abundant. Large quantities of white daisies are received, and a few yellows. Cape jasmine is sold in considerable quantity, but receipts are heavy and prices low. Cattleyas are abundant and of splendid quality.

There is only a moderate call for green goods.

The condition of the market will change radically with a change in the weather. Cold, such as we had at this date last year, will shorten the supply, while warm, bright days would have the opposite effect and might run the crops off quickly. But a return of sunny, seasonable weather will put new life into the demand and conditions will improve.

While business is nowhere near as good as it was a year ago, it must be remembered that May of 1907 was an exceptional month. There were no outdoor flowers and the weather was unseasonably cool. Supply was short and prices high. Sales for May last year, with practically every house in town, not only broke previous records but put them far in the shade. Comparisons of this month's business should be made with May of 1906, if with any other year. It is unfair to the present month to compare it with May of last year. The showing of aggregate sales is not bad when compared with years other than the last one.

Memorial Day Prospects.

It is the consensus of opinion that supplies will continue large for Memorial day. Most wholesalers believe the demand will take all the carnations which will be available, for the inquiry seems to be stronger for carnations than for roses. It is the general report that the advance orders and inquiries are much heavier than they were for Easter; indeed, several wholesalers say they are beyond any comparison. It is thought there will be an abundance of roses and that a fair grade of roses can be sold as cheaply as good carnations.

As to peonies, the prospect is for a short supply, even less than last year. Locally grown Old Red will be in, but others will be from the central part of the state, or the southern stock now in cold storage. This is said to be less in quantity than a year ago. The wholesalers are taking orders at $8 per hundred for assorted lots; $10 per hundred where only white or best pink is wanted. But there is a general feeling that prices will be higher before May 30 and that buyers who do not place advance orders will pay more money for their peonies.

Word has been received from Texas that the weather conditions are hurrying along the cape jasmine buds and that the crop will not hold out until Decoration day. Quantities have been placed in cold storage at Chicago, so that if Texas is out, this market probably can spare a few to ship back in that direction.

The Thompson Case.

Judge Landis, in the United States District Court, has dismissed the bankruptcy proceedings against the J. D. Thompson Carnation Co., declared the company solvent and assessed the costs against the petitioning creditors. The court ordered the receiver to turn the property over to Charles M. Fish, secretary of the company and husband of one of J. D. Thompson's sisters, and enjoined Thompson, the president of the company, from in any way interfering with the management of the business pending a decision in a case affecting the issues now in the Circuit Court of Will county.

The action was taken at the conclusion of Thompson's examination without any other witness being sworn, it having been intimated to Judge Landis that the proceedings in bankruptcy were inspired by Thompson himself. The Joliet News says Thompson took this step in a moment of anger brought about through a family quarrel. At any rate, the petition was filed only a few days after Judge Dibell, at Joliet, had restrained Thompson from carrying out certain projects outlined in notices Thompson had given the other stockholders.

At the hearing in the United States court it was brought out that the assets shown on the books amount to about $60,000 and the indebtedness less than $11,000. It also was shown that while J. D. Thompson was president and superintendent of the company at a salary of $2,100 a year, he opened a retail store and bought flowers from his own corporation and sold them to himself. He then claimed the profits of the retail business as his own.

The case now pending at Joliet is expected to, in a degree, straighten out the affairs of the company, which are involved in the settlement of the estate of Thompson's mother, who died some two years ago.

The Albert F. Amling Co. is building five greenhouses, 25x300 feet, boiler room 40x45, cooling and packing room 45x50, chimney 8x100 feet. Two tubular steam boilers 6x18 feet are being installed. The houses are to be planted to Beauties. A residence for the senior member of the firm is also being built, the total expenditures to be about $25,000. The old place is now almost entirely planted to green goods, in tip-top condition, especially the range of asparagus houses. These never were any better, extra heavy strings up to fifteen feet long being cut.

Henry Wehrman has invested a part of his surplus in a fine four-cylinder touring automobile. He is at present busy planting out his asters, a superior strain of his own. California poppies, sweet peas, mignonette and carnations were his winter crop, now followed by a liberal planting of chrysanthemums.

Across the street, on the place formerly owned by Wm. Collatz, Wm. Amling, a former Milwaukee school teacher, is having his first year's experience in running a greenhouse. He has had such splendid success that he says he never will go back to the famous city. He has at present the finest Enchantress and Lords imaginable, and his sweet peas are a sight worth seeing.

Various Notes.

C. W. McKellar was called to Chillicothe, O., last week to attend the funeral of his brother, Arthur, the youngest of five sons of the family. He was twenty-six years of age.

The Poehlmann Bros. Co. is just now making a remarkable cut of long-stemmed Richmond roses. Twice a day the city store receives several hundreds of fine flowers on stems from thirty-six to forty-eight inches long. They never have cut so large a proportion of this grade. Retailers who can use them are very willing to pay $2 per dozen.

Fred Lautenschlager returned May 20 from a trip of several months through the east in the interest of the Kroeschell Bros. Co.

Sol Garland, Jr., says the growers at Des Plaines are having their own troubles in getting the carnations into the field. His own stock is on sandy land and he has made fair progress in planting, but those who are on heavy soil have only made a beginning at the work.

It is interesting to note that Mike Winandy is back in the harness again. He has been given the contract for erecting the six new greenhouses to be built this season by Weiland & Risch, at Evanston. The houses are 27x192, and the owners supply all material, Winandy

The hoops on the big tank of the Des Plaines Floral Co. burst Saturday night and tank and contents fell upon the boiler-shed, practically demolishing it. This is the concern with which Harry Blewitt is connected.

Adolph Anthes has sold his establishment of about 5,000 feet of glass, at 2093 Lowell avenue, and will start in a few weeks to visit his mother, 81 years of age, at Frankfort, Germany. He expects to return in the autumn. The purchaser is Carl Potocki, who has a place on Milwaukee avenue, and who is putting the Anthes houses in charge of his son, Frank Potocki.

Wietor Bros. say they had all their carnations in the field some days ago, the stock being planted on sandy soil that can be worked a few hours after a rain. Few other growers are finished planting.

C. M. Dickinson says E. H. Hunt has experienced a big jump in the calls for To-bak-ine in the last few days, the annual spring invasion of thrips having occurred on schedule time.

W. J. Smyth spent Sunday at his summer place at Antioch. He says everything looks fine in the country and he is anxious to take up his summer home there, as he annually does about the end of June.

Kennicott Bros. Co. is showing some of its new peonies, of which stock has been worked up but no flowers yet cut for the market. One of these is a shell pink of remarkable fragrance and keeping qualities. E. E. Pieser says they had expected to cut a quantity of blooms this year, but the unfavorable season has interfered.

Local lilac was received May 15. It was in fine shape, the bushes being more heavily flowered than in a number of years. The crop lasted only a few days.

Mr. and Mrs. Peter Reinberg are celebrating their silver wedding anniversary today, May 21. High mass was celebrated this morning at St. Gregory's church, by Rev. A. J. Thiele, who performed the wedding ceremony in St. Henry's church, High Ridge, twenty-five years ago. This evening there will be a reception at Alderman Reinberg's home, to which a large number of friends and relatives have been invited. An elaborate decoration of the Mrs. Field rose will be one of the features.

E. C. Amling has been receiving some fine Gladiolus America, which has sold fairly well at $1.50 per dozen. Last summer the outdoor flowers were quickly taken at $1 per dozen.

Jegen has removed his store from 27 Madison street to 113 Dearborn street and says that it seems quite like coming back home, for he was on Washington, between State and Dearborn, for twenty-four years.

The George Wittbold Co. has recently received a large shipment of palms, bay trees and other Belgian stock.

John Kruchten says he is sticking right tight to business these days and that as a result he is steadily increasing its volume. He has secured several new shippers lately and is handling specially large quantities of roses at present.

George R. Scott has left the E. F. Winterson Co. and, with a relative, has opened a butter store at the corner of Fifth avenue and Lake street.

George Reinberg has replanted most of his place, which is now almost entirely in roses, and is cutting little.

Bassett & Washburn say the shipping trade is holding up quite well, all things considered.

Vaughan & Sperry say that May 18 they had more shipping orders booked for Decoration day than were sent out at Easter.

The A. L. Randall Co. says the supply department is having a good May, with Decoration day stock going to the retailers and insecticides and fertilizers to the growers.

Among last week's visitors was Martin Reukauf, of Bayersdorfer & Co., Philadelphia.

WINNIPEG, MAN.—Augustus K. Butchart says that the court proceedings reported May 14 have nothing to do with The Rosery retail flower store, but concern alone The Rosery Flower and Seed Co., Ltd. ## RESTING CALLAS.

Will you kindly tell me through the REVIEW the best way to rest calla lily bulbs after they have bloomed all winter and spring? Will the same bulbs after resting be apt to yield well the second year? L. N. B.

Presuming that your callas are grown in pots, you can now gradually withhold water. About the end of May remove them outdoors and lay on their sides. Leave them thus until the end of July, when they can be shaken out and repotted. There is no reason why these roots should not be as good or even better the second than the first season. In fact, they have lasted with us for a dozen years and given excellent returns. Pull off the small offsets. The larger

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

There was a little spurt in the business the last week, but it was soon over, only to fall back into the old rut. The work done was mostly funeral work and a few small weddings. The market was not short of stock at any time. All four of our commission men had stock enough to fill as large an order as one could give and then have some left over. And the prices are as low as they can be. Any lower would be next to giving them away.

Carnations are holding up well, Baer's Peoria stock taking the lead in this market. These are selling much better than roses, as the latter are too plentiful and soft. Sweet peas are abundant; in fact, there are too many in the market to get anything like a fair price for them. Peonies are selling well. Cape jasmines are a drug. We are looking for a heavy consignment of outdoor stock for Decoration day trade.

Club Meeting.

The Florists' Club held its regular monthly meeting last Thursday afternoon, and, as was expected, the attendance was light. The day being clear and warm, most of the members were busy with planting. President Young and Secretary Bentzen being among the busy ones, Vice-president Angermueller and ex-Secretary Beneke took their places. The meeting opened at 2:30 p. m., with fifteen members present. After the regular opening preliminaries, the different committees were called upon for reports. The pottery committee could not report a subscription of $10,000; they were discharged with thanks. The trustees reported that they as yet had made no arrangements for the club's outing. They were given full power to act and report full arrangements at the next meeting, as to place, date and program. For the good of the club several places for holding the outing were spoken for. The White City Amusement Garden, near Belleville, spoken for by A. S. Halstead, will be looked into by the trustees. A general review of the Easter trade was made in a discussion by the members and it was the opinion that this Easter the trade all through was as good as in any previous Easter, only that the lateness this year cut out a good deal of the bulbous stock and lilies were too far advanced.

The question box brought out a lot of pleasant and spirited discussions, which made things quite interesting to the handful of members present. The rest of the afternoon was spent in a near-by cafe, where refreshments and cigars were served, and there was a general talk on the social features of the club.

New Easter Lily

FORMOSA Lilium Longiflorum Originator's Stock

A decided improvement over any previous type of Japanese Easter Lily, having proven to be free from disease. During the past season we imported a limited quantity of these bulbs as an experiment, and distributed them among some of the largest Lily growers in this country. They were all very well pleased with it. One party to whom we sold 1500 had 1500 good plants when his house was examined before Easter. They were coming into bud splendidly, and showed not the slightest sign of disease.

The height of this Lily, with average culture, is a little taller than the Multiflorum, being from 3 to 3½ feet. 6-8 inch bulbs produce about 3 to 4 blooms. 7-9 inch bulbs produce about 4 to 6 blooms. 9-10 inch bulbs produce about 6 to 8 blooms. The variety itself makes an especially good one for the Lily grower to handle, because it may be potted about the middle of August or beginning of September, which will allow the grower to handle it in all the different temperatures that he desires, without extreme forcing.

One Lily grower gave us his opinion as follows: "I have been growing Lilies in very large quantities for years, but must admit that the 'Formosa Lilium Longiflorum' that you supplied me is the best that I have ever handled." This party has already booked his order with us for a very large number for next year's delivery See illustration of Emil Lieker's house of Formosa Lilies.

The Formosa Lilium Longiflorum is also reported as desirable for Christmas forcing; it can be had in flower just as easily, in fact it is more certain to be than Lilium Harrisii.

Frank Weber, of H. J. Weber & Son's Nursery Co., is at work rounding up our local nurserymen to attend the annual convention of the American Association of Nurserymen, which will be held at Milwaukee, June 10 to 12. A good delegation from here is promised.

Emil Schray, executor of the estate of William Schray, deceased, has posted a notice to all interested in the estate that he will make final settlement thereof at the next term of the probate court at the courthouse, St. Louis, the first Monday of June next.

Decoration day exercises in St. Louis this year will include throwing flowers upon the river in honor of the sailors who have been buried at sea. This should make an extra demand for stock on that day.

J. F. Ammann, of Edwardsville; A. S. Halstead, of Belleville, and Henry Johann, of Collinsville, spent Thursday in the city and attended the club meeting in the afternoon. Mr. Ammann reports that he has bought out the retail store of Mrs. Dietschy, at Alton, Ill., and runs the place with Mrs. Dietschy in charge. Mr. Halstead reports a fairly good trade this month in plants and cut flowers. Mr. Johann also had a good word for his business, only that the planting out season has been a little backward, owing to too much rain.

Walter Retzer, of the St. Louis Seed Co., reports that during the free seed distribution day for school children 16,000 children were given seeds. At the club meeting Thursday afternoon someone asked Mr. Retzer, "How do you find business?" His answer was, "By advertising for it."

Phil C. Scanlan, park commissioner, who was married May 12, left on a honeymoon trip through the east. While away he will visit the different parks in the big cities. During his absence George Ostertag will be acting park commissioner.

A. Mirring, florist at East St. Louis, lost 500 feet of glass by hail during the storm of Sunday, May 10, which also caused considerable damage to plants.

Pierre Schneider, manager for the Oakland Floral Co., Kirkwood, has resigned his position, the resignation to take effect July 1. He reports that he had half a house of sweet peas, 430 square feet, from which he cut 67,000 blooms, netting him 71 cents per foot. His Enchantress netted him 5 cents, and Lawson and Lady Bountiful 3 cents for the season. After July he will be married and take a trip to Europe. On his return he will build a place of his own in South St. Louis, near the Jefferson barracks.

The Horticultural Society did quite a lot of work at the flower booth at Forest Park Highlands Summer Garden for the charity carnival, held May 16. The booth netted a handsome profit to the carnival. The donations came from the store men and wholesalers. As stock was plentiful, an abundance of stock was obtained and the prices realized would make some of our retailers quiver. J. J. B.

The Bentzen Floral Co. recently made a huge floral tablet for the opening of the new Third National Bank. It stood six feet high and required 1,000 white carnations, Richmond and Bride roses, pink and white peonies, and sweet peas. On the tablet was inscribed the donor's idea of what the bank's growth would be in the next hundred years.

The Market.

Conditions show little improvement in cut flower circles. Demand is light and no particular change for the better is likely until Memorial week, at which time there promises to be a record-breaking business. Roses are much too abundant for the market's needs, and sell at low prices. Carnations are in much the same condition. A slight betterment is, however, noted this week, owing to the coming of Memorial day. The quality remains good. Violets are at last finished and sweet peas are less plentiful than they were. There is a good supply of gladioli. Of the nanus section, the varieties Peach Blossom and Blushing Bride are mostly in evidence.

Bulbous stock from outdoors is less abundant. Of Narcissus poeticus there is a heavy supply, however. Lily of the valley from outdoors is not yet in season. It promises to be right for Memorial day. Lilies and callas are plentiful and in little demand.

A good call for bedding plants is starting and specialists in this line are getting busy. Next week promises to see business lively and an active call for both potted plants and cut flowers. Colored flowers, particularly bright shades,

Club Meeting.

There was an attendance of over 100 at the May meeting of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club May 19, to hear F. E. Palmer give a most pertinent and practical talk on "Some Points on the Art of Selling." It was a new subject for the club, but proved an interesting one, as the lively discussion showed. Messrs. Holmes, Cameron, Welch, Elliott, George Anderson and Kennedy all had ideas on the subject. It was voted to hold a picnic this summer and several locations were suggested, but no selection made. Four new members were elected.

M. A. Patten received a report of merit for a white and two crimson seedling carnations of excellent quality, and also showed a good yellow. Other exhibits included: Marguerites, from F. W. Fletcher; a fine deep Enchantress sport, from William Swan; Maid, Bride and Liberty roses, from Eber Holmes; late tulips, from W. W. Rawson & Co.

It was reported that Wilfrid Wheeler is seriously ill.

Various Notes.

Peirce Bros. have an immense stock of Spiræa Japonica and stocks just right for Memorial day.

The display of ornamental crab-apples at the Arnold arboretum has been superb during the last few days. The lilac display will be at its height during the coming week, many being already in full flower.

T. F. Galvin has an interesting display of the yellow tulip orchid, Cattleya citrina, in his Tremont street store at present, also Cattleya Mossiæ and other seasonable orchids.

Albert Roper, of Tewksbury, will introduce his new variegated carnation, Bay State, next season. All who have seen this fine variety on the exhibition table have been greatly impressed with it.

Vegetation is this season about ten days earlier than in 1907. Lilacs a year ago were not in flower for Memorial day, nor was lily of the valley. There promises to be a good outdoor supply of flowers this year. Many of the late tulips will be just right.

Frank and Robert S. Edgar have acquired the farm, with several new and commodious greenhouses erected by W. W. Edgar, their father, and will operate it as an independent concern. Herman S. Bartsch will take charge of the older greenhouses and manage them for Mrs. Edgar.

Farquhar & Co. have a fine display of the late flowering tulips in their nurseries at present. These bulbs are worthy the increased attention of florists, being so much superior to the early flowering section in length of stem and freedom from disease.

Thomas Roland, of Nahant, has a superb house of candytuft right for Memorial day. W. N. CRAIG.

Thomas F. Galvin returned from Europe May 14. It is stated that while in England he acquired an interest in a new carnation with which he hopes to repeat the success he achieved when he distributed Lawson in the trade. He told a reporter for the Boston Herald that "Europe is far behind the United States in floriculture. The European florists are not so enterprising as are their rivals on this side. The Americans are more daring in their ventures, and while they score some failures they also achieve a much larger number of successes."

The Rising Eastern Market.

Conditions are less favorable in the cut flower market today than a week ago. Thursday and Friday of last week were decidedly poor. Business improved considerably on Saturday, and was fair on Monday, but there is more stock coming in than the market can consume advantageously.

Peonies from the south have made their appearance in quantity, the varieties covering a good range of color. They are in fair demand and prices are held firmly as these notes are written, but it is impossible to say what change a day may bring. Carnations, next to peonies the most interesting flowers as Decoration day approaches, have exactly reversed the conditions existing prior to Mothers' day. White is still more in demand than colors, the children carrying off quantities May 18 in honor, it was said, of the peace conference on that day.

The rose situation remains practically the same as a week ago, barring the fact that American Beauties have fallen slightly in price (they are far and away the best value of anything on the list today), and that the quantity of fancy teas is decreasing. The best Bride, Maid and Killarney are easily worth listed quotations, but the best are by no means so plentiful as they were just after Easter. Kaiserin is increasing in quantity. The second crop promises to be on before Decoration day.

Sweet peas are waning. Really fine stock is in demand, but difficult to obtain. We are told that outdoor sweet peas will be here before next month, but it is difficult to verify this statement. Yellow daisies, practically the only thing of that color in evidence today, are sought at times. Cattleyas and lælias are still in strong supply. Gardenias have been reinforced by the arrival of the southern cape jasmine, with disastrous effects on the price. The indoor stock is preferred, but the outdoor stock will do if the price on the favorite is not right. Whether it be the outdoor valley, the children, or the peace conference, I know not, but the demand for valley has perceptibly increased during the last few days. Tulips are practically over, excepting Gesneriana, most decorative but not much sought by cut flower buyers. Easter lilies have shortened in supply and advanced in price.

Decoration Day Prospects.

The consensus of opinion points to a heavy supply of locally grown peonies for May 30. The southern supply, centering about Richmond, Va., is expected to be over before that day. It will be remembered that last year locally grown peonies were not in at Decoration day, the bulk of the stock sent out from this city being southern grown, and it was not obtainable in sufficient quantities to meet the demand. This year, barring unforeseen weather conditions, it is probable that all orders can be fully filled. Indications point to a good supply of carnations, with white in the lead. The reports from the rose growers vary, but it is probable that there will be an excellent supply of medium grade roses, and a fair supply of fancy stock. It is probable that Japanese snowballs and mock-oranges will be at their best at this time.

Italian Pottery.

Paul Berkowitz, of H. Bayersdorfer & Co., has a pleasing novelty on his show counter this week, called Italian pottery. It is something decidedly out of the common, a class of pottery that suggests at once harmonious combinations with various shades of green, and in size and shape it is refined rather than obtrusive. These Italian pottery vases and boxes, ornamented with their curious figures, are intended for plants on the table or in window, and when fitted with tin and filled with choice plants will certainly make a hit.

Our fields will be timed just right for Memorial Day this year. Long stemmed, fresh, opening buds, white and pink assorted, handled by an expert grower.

The Plant Situation.

The tide of business, centered for so many months about the wholesale cut flower commission houses in the heart of the city, has rolled out to the suburbs, where all the florists are doing an active business that keeps them hustling from early in the morning until late at night. The demand for hardy roses, geraniums, vincas, sage, cannas, coleus, crotons, dracænas and other bedding and decorative plants has never been better. Many florists in and about the city agree in this statement.

Various Notes.

William C. Smith, the well known grower of Sixtieth and Market streets, is now a councilman from his West Philadelphia ward.

"Take care of your place, and your place will take care of you."

Berger Bros. expect to have good Bride and Maid all summer, one of their leading consignors having a house planted in these varieties. It is now in splendid condition. It has not done much during the winter.

Walter P. Stokes is cutting a splendid lot of Lilium giganteum from his Floracroft Greenhouses, at Moorestown.

H. Bayersdorfer and Mrs. Bayersdorfer reached Hamburg safely May 16.

The Andorra Nurseries are receiving much praise for the hanging garden planted for Dr. Woodward, at St. Martins, near Chestnut Hill. It is now a mass of bloom.

The Floral Exchange is tearing down several old houses, to be rebuilt with one large house to be planted in tea roses this summer.

M. Rice & Co. report that they have just received a large shipment of wheat from Italy. The demand for sheaf wheat is large.

Arthur Zirkman, of M. Rice & Co., returned from the east May 15. Mr. Zirkman says that the demand for flowers, real and metallic, for Decoration day about Boston is something phenomenal, Decoration day figuring more largely than Easter in the business of most of the florists in that section. This, of course, excepts plants. PHIL.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

Summer is here and with the summer temperature come the usual conditions characteristic of every summer since there was a market. Prices are about as low as they can be and a little below any former average at this time of the year. Even the regular Saturday and Monday lift was sidetracked this week. Retail windows were full of dollar boxes, an excellent way of taking advantage of the surplus. Warendorff, on Broadway, especially sets the pace in this splendid advertising method. If there were more original advertisers among the retailers in this city, there would easily be materialized 100 per cent more trade in the aggregate. Even now, the retail stores that maintain the most unique and artistic decorations in their windows do the bulk of the business. It is strange the rank and file, especially the rank, do not wake up and realize the indisputable value of window advertising. Fortunately, New York, as an offset, has many of the most artistic floral artists in America, and these men give a daily exhibition of their knowledge as to art, color, blending and arrangement, worth going miles to see. Now that the June weddings are so near, these efforts bring practical rewards.

Decoration day gives promise of greater observance than usual this year, if advance orders to the supply men for wreaths and other designs, in metal and preserved leaves, are an indication. All the supply houses have been working overtime and claim to be behind with their orders, while shipments continue daily to every part of the country.

The busy times at the seed houses continue. There seems to be no end to the planting season and the stores are crowded. The same cheerful condition prevails at all the auction rooms and the amount of sales through these mediums has been enormous. The auctions will continue far into June and special sales next week at all of them will be made of stock serviceable for Decoration day.

As to the cut flower market, nothing can be added to last week's report and the same prices hold, with little prospect of change for the better before May 30.

Carnations held fairly well at a slight advance the early part of last week, but toward the end they joined the rose procession, which was on its way to Brooklyn by the wagon-loads. All stock is exceptionally good and shipments continue excessive.

Now that the seaside resorts are open, the outlet through the street merchants will decrease, these gentry going into fruit and other lines at the resorts.

Orchids and valley feel the benefit of the spring wedding demand. The improvement will hold for several weeks at any rate.

Horticultural Society Show.

Those who visited the exhibition of the Horticultural Society last week were amply repaid for the journey. The annual meeting was held May 13, Wednesday, in the Museum building. Six new members were added to the council: F. R. Pierson, F. L. Atkins, Ed. Roehrs, Joseph A. Manda, E. S. Miller and C. B. Weathered. The rest of the old officers were reëlected. Dr. B. T. Galloway, of Washington, gave an interesting illustrated lecture on violets. The attendance was larger than usual, the splendid orchid exhibit drawing many strangers, while the number of horticulturists was far above the usual average.

J. T. Butterworth, of Boston, was awarded the gold medal for his specimen Cattleya Mossiæ, named in honor of his wife, and a grand plant, carrying over twenty splendid flowers.

Silver medals were given Julius Roehrs Co., Lager & Hurrell and C. G. Roebling. Bronze medals were awarded to Joseph A. Manda, Siebrecht & Son and W. A. Manda.

The other orchid exhibitors included Dr. Kitchen, Siebrecht & Son, Clement Moore, Ordonez Bros. and others. The latter showed five fine plants of Cattleya Trianæ, only six months established and showing ten new growths ready to bloom.

Weinberg's exhibit of cacti included over 300 varieties. Other exhibits were: W. McCallum, flowering trees and shrubs; Siebrecht & Son, stove and greenhouse plants and roses; Frank H. Presby, dwarf Alpine iris; Julius Roehrs Co., Rose Newport Fairy; F. R. Pierson Co., seventy-six varieties of flowering shrubs, and a plant of the Superbissima fern, a table of narcissi and peonies. Wild flowers, outdoor bulbous plants and vegetables also were shown.

Altogether the exhibition was one of the best in the records of the society and augurs hopefully for the American Rose Society show in June. Benjamin Hammond grows more and more poetical and enthusiastic concerning it every week. If Mr. Hammond can manage to have the rose show on a Saturday and Sunday, I will guarantee him an attendance of 100,000. Dr. Britton tells me there is no limit to the crowds on these days and here is an educational opportunity that should be taken advantage of if possible. The date so far is indefinite, the middle or last week in June. Better make it June 20 or 27 and keep it open Sunday. If you do, you will have an audience worth while catering to. It's the only hope for crowded recognition.

Various Notes.

The contemplated combination of rose and carnation growers into one grand syndicate that would revolutionize the wholesale business is still in embryo, wherever that is, and the position of manager remains unfilled.

Next Wednesday, May 27, is ladies' night at the Florists' Club's rooms, in the Grand Opera House building. This night has been specially set aside for the ladies and there will be no business of any kind. A splendid musical entertainment, a collation and dancing ought to bring out a record crowd. To ensure its success, write W. Rickards, 37 East Nineteenth street, at once how many ladies you will bring, and be there, rain or shine. The outing committee hopes to distribute its program that evening. In advertising and prizes it will beat the splendid record of 1907. If any member of the club has not yet subscribed, Chairman Marshall, at 146 West Twenty-third street, can receive word as late as Monday, May 25, and still have time to include you in the list of patrons. Telephone him if you have overlooked your opportunity.

Frank Millang has returned from Maine, where, near the ocean, he has secured a summer home for his family and where he will spend his June and September vacations.

Sidney Wertheimer, who has returned from a successful trip, says the demand for chiffons and nettings for Decoration day is far ahead of other years. He has found the outlook in the ribbon business encouraging all over the country and predicts a prosperous season for the florists during the coming year.

The Moderation Society of New York is doing a good work by distribution of flowers at frequent intervals among the dwellers in the darkened tenements and the slum districts of New York. This society and the Helping Hand Guilds do much unselfish work amid these unhappy sections where the breath of the buttercup never comes.

Bowling.

A greater interest is developing in the bowling contest, as the endurance test for an average 155 record draws to a close. Up to date Manda is the only one in sight of Traendly's free transportation.

Several "experts" who insisted on a change to better alleys have grown weary and fallen by the way. The club that represents New York at the convention will be selected from those who have been faithful, whether they average 155 or not.

The following is last week's score, the first two games counting in the record for transportation:

| Player. | 1st | 2d | 3d | 4th | Av. |
| Manda | 167 | 172 | 162 | ... | 167 |

NEPHROLEPIS WHITMANI.

The variety of this species—the so-called ostrich feather fern of the American nurserymen—says the Horticultural Trade Journal, has already become a great favorite in England, France and Germany, although at one time the description of it was thought to be only another instance of American Reclame, but eighteen months' observation of the fern has shown that the formation of the fronds is regular and it is most enduring. Every frond, big and little, has the peculiar formation, the feathering being not only remarked along the sides of the fronds, but likewise at the top, and so that it is not flattish in form, but the whole body can only be described as being similar to an ostrich feather. Its gracefulness and enduring qualities make it good material for the table and decorative purposes and for bouquet work.

SWEET corn is still good property.

WATKINS & SIMPSON, London, have a new form of giant pansy to which they have given the name Matchless.

HOGG & LYTLE have removed their offices from Port Hope, Ont., to Room 413 Board of Trade building, Toronto.

MELZER'S SEED STORE, Watertown, Wis., has been in business over thirty years and this season advertises: "We comply in all instances with the Wisconsin seed law."

THE pea crops stand fairly well, according to reports, but the land is wet and cold, so much so as to keep the crops back, and it is feared that some rotting may upset some of the former calculations.

THE onion bulbs set out to make seed have so far stood the weather better than almost any other crops. This is about the first crop that could be gotten into the soil in the central western sections and the early start has put it all to the good.

THE sentiment of the seedsmen who were at Chicago May 16 was that in so far as the pure seed bill goes, the less said the better, the opinion being that no snap action will be taken in any event and that if the subject is not kept stirred up it is likely to be lost sight of in the press of larger issues.

THE H. E. Fiske Seed Co., Boston, suffered a loss of from $1,000 to $1,500 by fire May 16 and had a narrow escape from a still greater disaster at a season when business is still heavy. The firemen had a hard fight to confine the flames to the top floor. It will be remembered that the Fiske Co. occupies the building in which W. W. Rawson & Co. were burned out just at the opening of the season two years ago.

THE Nursery and Seed Trade Association of Great Britain finds the handling of credits and collections one of its principal fields of usefulness. In the last year its secretary answered 870 inquiries as to credits and collected accounts, amounting to over $27,500, principally in small sums, after the members had failed to obtain payment through their own efforts. At the recent annual meeting N. N. Sherwood, of Hurst & Son, was reëlected president.

THE season was cold in Holland bulb fields and it was not until the first week in May that the early tulips were in full bloom. The blooming was excellent, all crops having come through the winter in fine shape.

F. W. BRUGGERHOF, of J. M. Thorburn & Co., and Captain Burnet Landreth, of the D. Landreth Seed Co., started May 16 for an all-round visit among the seed growing establishments of the Pacific coast. They will be absent about seven weeks.

THE Buckbee non-warranty case is still pending in the United States court at Freeport, Ill., and it is likely to be quite some time before the issue will be tried out, but the "disclaimer" is having a test in another middle western state this week.

THE stock of lily of the valley pips in storage gives every indication of exceeding the season's demand and importers are anxious to sell, while not interested, as in recent years, in securing an increased supply for next season. Orders placed in Germany to date are reported to be considerably reduced as compared with last year.

GERMAN SEED TRADE.

The cold weather held on unusually late at Erfurt, Germany, where the season is always tardy, and as to the prospect of the growing crops of vegetables for seed, it is difficult to say much, as everything is so backward. Flower seed prospects can be judged with little more accuracy. The winter has been long, with spasmodic intervals of frost and thaw. Such conditions are generally trying for over-year crops, but a fairly good snowfall acted as a protection against the low temperature. the development of asters, phloxes and other annuals usually raised in frames.

The close of the wholesale season shows good sales have been made in lettuces, peas, celeries, savoys, chicory, egg plants and endives, and a satisfactory turnover has resulted in cabbages, kales, Brussels sprouts, kohlrabi, capsicums, tomatoes, leeks, parsnips and mangel wurzels. Moderate business only has been done in spinach, parsley, carrots and turnips, while the sales of onions, cucumbers and beans, especially the latter, have fallen below expectations. In cauliflowers the Autumn Giant and Algiers varieties have done well, but others only moderately. Radishes have gone off all right except the autumn and winter kinds, which have rather hung fire.

A SCARLET CINERARIA.

At the recent Ghent centenary exhibition, one of the greatest ever held in Europe, among the notable things was Cineraria Scarlet Hybrid, exhibited by Vilmorin, Andrieux & Co., Quai de la Megisserie, Paris. This is of good florists' form, and has fine heads of blooms, but its great distinction lies in the fact that the flowers are wholly of a rich, deep scarlet color, a dazzling shade. "We have so long been used to white, and blue, and purple, and dull crimson shades in cinerarias," says the Gardeners' Magazine, London, in speaking of this exhibit, "that we have regarded a scarlet variety as something to be hoped for, but scarcely obtainable. Vilmorin, Andrieux & Co. have, so to speak, accomplished the impossible, and when they send out seeds of this brilliant variety in 1909 there is not the slightest doubt that the demand will be at least equal to the supply."

THE WEEK IN SEEDS.

Trade for the week in general is reported good. Unfavorable weather still has a tendency to shorten sales, but the majority of the seedsmen, as well as customers, seem to have gotten used to it and things have assumed a more normal aspect. In the vicinity of Chicago and other central western sections, planting has been greatly delayed and it is thought that many acres of the standard market gardeners' crops will not be planted. Some of the onion set growers are likely to have many acres less planted to this crop than they intended to have. Louisville reports the acreage planted to sets as about as usual, with conditions at present very unfavorable owing to the extreme wet. At most of the onion set growing points where the stand is well up the weeds are growing about as fast as the seedlings, and unless conditions change many acres of sets will be so overrun with weeds that they may have to be plowed up. Corn planting everywhere is reported far behind and sweet corn has not been cleaned up as closely as it was expected to be by this date. Things are quieting down with the catalogue houses, and all seem fairly well content with the season's grist. Counter trade continues fair, especially with plants, etc., whenever the weather affords any encouragement to planters. Too much wet has been the greatest drawback during May.

IMPORTS AND EXPORTS.

Imports and exports of merchandise for the month of April, and for the ten months ended April 30, show the balance of trade strongly in our favor and are second only to good crops in insuring the prosperity of the country. The figures are as follows:

| April. | 1908. | 1907. |
| Imports | $ 87,481,258 | $ 129,279,300 |
| Exports | 133,470,333 | 157,454,631 |
| Excess exports | $ 45,989,075 | $ 28,175,331 |
| Ten months ending April: | | |
| Imports | $1,018,345,740 | $1,195,124,501 |
| Exports | 1,631,906,065 | 1,608,355,030 |
| Excess exports | $ 613,560,325 | $ 413,230,529 |

At Washington, May 16, E. H. Harriman, whose interests are probably as large as those of any man in America, said: "The basis of prosperity in every country is the product of the soil, and crops here could hardly be better. The farmers are contented; they have no mortgages to pay, their fences are built, and their land is productive. Everything depends on that. I see no reason for any business depression. We are all right."

THE INSECTICIDES BILL.

The bill now in congress providing for the regulation of the manufacture, transportation and sale of insecticides was drawn at the instance of the committee on proprietary insecticides of the Association of Economic Entomologists. It is on the lines of the pure food and drugs act, providing similar means for administration and enforcement, with both fine and imprisonment as penalties for violation.

The chairman of the committee states that the bill has been drawn to aid the honest manufacturer and that it will do much toward making the business more stable and lead to a larger use of the products. The sections which are of chief interest to the users of insecticides are as follows:

"Sec. 7. That for the purpose of this act an article shall be deemed adulterated—

"In the case of Paris green: First, if it does not contain at least fifty-five percentum of arsenious oxide; second, if it contains arsenic in water soluble forms equivalent to more than three and one-half percentum of arsenious oxide; third, if any substance has been mixed and packed with it so as to reduce or lower or injuriously affect its quality or strength. In the case of lead arsenate: First, if it contains more than fifty percentum of water; second, if it contains arsenic in water soluble forms equivalent to more than one percentum of arsenic oxide; third, if any substance has been mixed and packed with it so as to reduce or lower or injuriously affect its quality or strength.

"In the case of fungicides or insecticides, other than Paris green and lead arsenate: First, if its strength or purity fall below the professed standard or quality under which it is sold; second, if any substance has been substituted wholly or in part for the article; third, if any valuable constituent of the article has been wholly or in part abstracted.

"Sec. 9. That for the purposes of this act an article shall be deemed to be misbranded—

"In the case of fungicides, Paris greens, lead arsenates, and insecticides other than Paris greens:

To section 9 the following amendment is suggested: "Fourth, If it is intended for use on vegetation and shall contain any substance or substances which, although destroying, repelling or mitigating insects, shall be injurious to such vegetation."

The Association of Economic Entomologists is anxious for the passage of the bill at the present session of congress, but with adjournment little more than a week away the chances are not bright, as the manufacturers of insecticides will wish to be heard by the senate committee on agriculture before the passage of the act.

WILSON MAY RESIGN.

It again has been reported that Secretary of Agriculture James Wilson, who has held his cabinet portfolio longer than any member of the cabinet, has announced to several of his friends that he is about to resign. Should Mr. Wilson resign before the expiration of President Roosevelt's term in March, 1909, there is little doubt that his successor will be Gifford Pinchot, the United States forester. It is known that the president would gladly give him a cabinet position if the opportunity offered. Mr. Wilson entered President McKinley's cabinet March 5, 1897, and has served continuously ever since.

light as with some other crops. One of the primary items of expense connected with violet culture is the picking of the flowers, hence it is necessary that due attention be given to convenience in getting to the plants, both for the purpose of picking and in order to have access at all times so as to take the necessary steps to prevent the inroads of disease and insects.

A violet house may be any length or any width. Our preference is for houses from 100 to 150 feet in length, twelve feet wide, seven feet to the ridge and running north and south. This form of construction is comparatively inexpensive and enables the utilization of one walk in the center, with beds on either side easily reached from the walk. It is not necessary here to go into a full description of the question of heating, ventilating, water conveniences, and so on. The violet does not need a great deal of heat, and if the house is so piped as to maintain a temperature of from 40 to 50 degrees when the outside temperature is zero, it is all that is essential. Our preference is for hot water heat for the violet, for the reason that it frequently occurs that only a little heat is necessary and this can be secured by a comparatively small fire in our boilers.

Cost of Bench Construction.

At this time it may be well to call attention to some recent work we have been carrying on with a view to obtaining information regarding the cost of bench construction. With the prices of lumber constantly increasing, it is becoming an important matter to find substitutes for this material. As a rule we do not advocate the growing of violets on benches. In some cases, however, it is necessary to do this. Even if solid beds are used, wood, or some substitute therefor, must be used for the sides. We have tried concrete construction work, also some bench construction of iron and terra cotta, also wooden bench construction. The object of this experimental work is, first, to determine the relative cost of the different kinds of material, and second, the difference in growth of crops when produced on solid beds as compared to raised benches. As already explained, it is settled in our mind that solid beds are more desirable for violet culture than raised benches. Whether this is true of carnations we are not yet ready to say.

Regarding the cost of construction of the different kinds of beds, we have definite figures at hand, showing the cost per square foot of bed space for the three kinds of construction, namely, raised wooden benches, solid beds with walls of concrete sixteen inches high and four inches thick, and raised beds with iron frames and tile bottoms. The relative cost is: For the wooden benches, 12½ cents per square foot of bed space; 11 cents for the solid beds with concrete walls, and 17 cents per square foot for the iron frame benches with tile bottoms.

The cost per plant for carnations is 9 cents per plant for the wooden benches, 8 cents for the solid beds with concrete walls, and 12 cents for the iron frame benches with tile bottoms.

The cost per plant for violets is 6 cents for the wooden benches, 5½ cents for the solid beds with concrete walls, and 8.6 cents for the raised beds with iron frames and tile bottoms.

Thus it appears that, taking the first cost of construction, the solid beds with concrete walls are the cheapest. There is no question as to their durability. Wooden benches under ordinary construction will begin to rot out the second year and by the third or fourth year will have to be in large measure replaced.

I have probably now devoted all the time necessary to the construction of the houses and would next invite attention to an important factor in the production of any crop under glass and especially the violet, namely, the soil.

heating pipes with a strong solution of the same.

Red spider is sometimes bothersome, but it can be kept in check by proper syringing. Snails and woodlice are also injurious, but can be trapped with hollowed potatoes set between the pots, or with lettuce or cabbage leaves.

If it is possible to do so, it is well to empty the greenhouse each year for a few days for the purpose of painting, etc. At this time the house may be fumigated with a double strength of hydrocyanic acid gas to kill all insects. If the insects are very troublesome, hydrocyanic acid gas may be used in safe quantities while the plants are in the house.

Cattleyas are sometimes injured by what is known as black spot. This is invariably caused by too much shade, overwatering or by syringing too late in the afternoon. The foliage of the plants should be dry before evening. However, syringing should be indulged in every bright day to prevent insects from getting a foothold. Give plenty of ventilation whenever possible and there will be little danger from black spot.

Buying Stock.

By a careful selection of species and varieties a constant succession of bloom may be maintained. The best way to purchase cattleyas, if for a large collection, is by the case, just imported. In this way many fine varieties are secured, including the white, or albino forms. When only a few plants are wanted it it best to buy some unestablished plants from reputable dealers, and in this way there is a chance of getting some exceptional varieties. After the plants have once flowered with the dealer he is able to select the finest forms to sell at high prices to those who are eager to secure the best that the market can afford, and for this reason the unestablished plants are most desirable.

The heavy shipments of cattleyas from the tropics during the last few years, and the limitation of the natural supply, will soon cause the prices to advance, and as the demand for cattleyas is increasing greatly each year we may expect the price to advance at almost any time. However, there need be no great concern for the cattleya supply of the future. Cattleyas are being raised from seed extensively in Europe and in this country. The high prices now obtained for hybrids will soon be a thing of the past. They will soon be within the reach of those with a moderate purse. The chief advantage in having a collection of hybrids is that they have no decided period of rest. They bloom more than once each year, and for this reason are cultivated with greater ease.

TOMATOES.

Regulation of Moisture.

With the brighter days and more drying atmosphere, a much more plentiful supply of water will be needed to keep the plants in a healthy, growing condition. Not only is more moisture at the roots needed, but more atmospheric moisture is also necessary. The amount of atmospheric moisture must be judiciously regulated. In this the weather conditions must be taken into consideration. On bright, warm days it would be hard to overcharge the atmosphere, as it would be necessary to have a good deal of air on the houses to keep the temperature sufficiently low, but the moisture should be so applied that it will be pretty well dried out before the time the house has to be shut down, so as not to have too humid an atmosphere over night. On dull, cloudy days little sprinkling of the passageways or benches will be needed. On such days there is usually sufficient humidity in the air so that it is unnecessary to create any artificially in the house.

On the other hand, an atmosphere overcharged with moisture is productive of fungous diseases, which often prove quite troublesome to the grower of tomatoes indoors. A disease known as spot is the most prevalent, more so in the late spring and early summer months than through the winter. This is undoubtedly a fungus, which breaks out in yellow spots, usually on the older leaves, and if not checked will soon spread and destroy the whole leaf. The regulation of atmospheric moisture, as I have stated above, is one of the best preventive measures, and a dusting with lime and sulphur mixed in about equal proportions and applied when the foliage is dry is good for preventing the spread of the disease. We have tried Bordeaux mixture with fair success, but it leaves the plants unsightly and we have not found it any more efficacious in preventing the spread of the disease than the lime and sulphur.

San Jose, Cal.—Chas. C. Navlet & Co. had charge of the decorations for the opening concert at the new Arcade store. Many palms and potted plants were used and the pillars and fixtures were artistically entwined with smilax. The general effect was excellent.

PORTLAND, ORE.

Current Comment.

There is a feeling among the retailers that trade is a little off and has been for three weeks. Some days it is extremely quiet, a condition we cannot accustom ourselves to at this season of the year. Society is not doing much entertaining, its time being occupied with automobiles and Merry Widow hats. There are enough funeral orders to create a fair demand for flowers and, with plenty of fine stock, the work turned out is of a high order.

A leading topic with the press and people of Portland is the coming rose fiesta, which will take place early in June. A long continued spell of cool weather has caused some apprehension that the roses will not be far enough advanced to be seen at their best. Vegetation has indeed been checked somewhat and warm weather would be welcomed. The committees in charge are making rather elaborate preparations and it is to be hoped that nothing will happen to frustrate their plans. The railroads will run special excursions and, as the writer has just returned from a snipe shooting expedition, he is in a position to state that the country people are showing keen interest and will be here in large numbers to help celebrate. Everything possible will be done to help make Portland worthy of its name, "The Rose City."

GREVILLEA THELEMANNIANA.

In potting Grevillea Thelemanniana, rooted cuttings, we always lose forty to seventy-five per cent. We have best success in potting on damp days and placing immediately in a shaded hotbed. We also find it best to pot them as soon as well rooted, though we have left some in the cutting bed for two or three months and then have potted them and cut them back. The trouble seems to be that the roots are so brittle they break right at the callous; that is, the outside breaks clear around and leaves the root hanging by the central portion only.

This is one of the best sellers we have here, in southern California, and I would like very much to learn how to get a larger per cent to live. It is easy to root and to grow after being established.

L. E. N.

There should be no trouble in handling Grevillea Thelemanniana, provided they are left sufficiently long in the cutting bed to insure their adapting themselves to new surroundings when taken out. L. E. N. has the right idea when he states that he has good success after leaving the cuttings in the bed for from two to three months. This is clearly not too long, especially if they can be cut back somewhat when taken out. The rule with all classes of plants that are of the same habit of growth as G. Thelemanniana is to select a dark day for potting when possible, and at this season of the year to nip the tops back well, also seeing that they are well shaded and kept free from draughts for a few days.

I cannot think of any other suggestion to offer and can see no reason why, if the plants are left a reasonable time in the cutting bed, they should not commence to grow as soon as potted.

During our warm spring and summer weather it is always necessary to be a little more careful in these details than at an earlier or later time, and although the cuttings root more quickly, they must be carefully nipped back if drawn up too much and the top must be shortened in proportion to the roots, which should not be broken if handled gently. G.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

I have interviewed most of the larger retail firms in San Francisco and vicinity during the last few days, with the object of ascertaining whether or not the coming of the long looked for fleet proved to be of any advantage to the trade. With the exception of the green goods men, who seem to have had the entire cream of the extra business, I have only found three firms that will admit that the last week's receipts were up to expectations. Ninety per cent of the retailers claimed that business was from twenty to thirty-three per cent less than that of last year, and a few said the receipts were about equal to those of that time. From the piles of flowers seen in the stores on every hand, it is evident that the retailers expected to sell quite a quantity to the 100,000 or more people that are in town now, and such an expectation was reasonable enough. But a summary at this time shows that the public spent all its spare cash for flags and banners and such patriotic emblems, and did not patronize the florists to any extent.

In my inquiries, I called on one of our largest retailers, who was being importuned by a member of the finance committee of the fleet celebration for a donation, and was rather surprised to hear him exclaim: "I donated in my loss of business to the committee not less than $500 for the celebration. I did this much against my will, but I gave it just the same, and now, in addition to this, you wish me to further subscribe $100. Well—nothing doing."

This was probably an extreme case, but I have ample evidence that the coming of the fleet was much more of a financial loss to the retailers than anything else. Whatever benefit may have accrued to other lines of trade in a general way, the benefits were all divided among the hotels, restaurants, saloons and, last but not least, the railroad and street car companies.

Various Notes.

Mildred and Milton Nunemacher, twins, aged 2½ years and children of Robert Nunemacher, were burned to death in the fire which consumed the family home May 12. Mr. Nunemacher is a well-known landscape gardener of Oakland, Cal., and has been in charge of the City Hall park for several years.

Great preparations are being made for the opening of the spring floral exhibition in Lyric hall, May 15 and 16. Full particulars will appear next week.

John M. Holland will open a floral establishment at the entrance to Mountain

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.
Pres., J. W. Hill, Des Moines, Ia.; Vice-Pres., C. M. Hobbs, Bridgeport, Ind.; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester, N. Y.; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester, N. Y. The 38d annual convention will be held at Milwaukee, June 10 to 12, 1908.

W. A. Peterson, Chicago, is at Kansas City for a few days.

F. Fallon, the florist of Roanoke, Va., will establish a $5,000 nursery at Winston Salem, N. C., this spring.

A Texas nurseryman comes to the front with a dwarf pecan tree. There are various reasons why such a tree will prove popular.

It is reported that 75,000 rose plants are going into the field at Charlotte, N. C., where a son of Antoine Wintzer, of Dingee & Conard Co., West Grove, Pa., recently leased four acres of land.

N. T. Nielson, of Sparks, Nev., who at present has two acres devoted to the raising of fruit and ornamental trees, is negotiating for the purchase of more land, with a view to making his nursery the largest in the state.

The "corn special" has become a regular thing on the railroads of the prairie states, but it remained for the Spokane & Inland Railway, operating in the state of Washington, to put out a fruit train to teach the farmers how to grow winter apples.

The Chicago nurserymen, represented by B. E. Gage and Carl Cropp, are arranging for the reception of members of the trade passing through Chicago June 9 en route to the annual convention of the American Association of Nurserymen at Milwaukee June 10 to 12.

G. L. Taber, proprietor of the Glen St. Mary Nurseries, Glen St. Mary, Fla., arrived at New York on the last Clyde line steamer from Jacksonville. He was accompanied by his family and will spend the summer at the eastern resorts. He reports an excellent season, but cut short by warm weather at an earlier date than usual.

At the last session of the Mississippi legislature a nursery inspection law was passed, similar in its provisions to those of other southern states. Prof. Glenn W. Herrick, the state entomologist, is making preparations for the enforcement of the law. His first step will be the inspection of every nursery in the state and the interception of infested stock from other states; then he will take up the cleaning up of the orchards.

SHRUB JOTTINGS.

Prunus maritima, better known as the beach plum, was a snowy mass of flowers in Massachusetts May 16. This shrub is somewhat decumbent in habit, carries a good many spines and the branches are warty. It is found naturally from New Brunswick and the Great Lakes to Virginia. The leaves, which are dark green in summer, take on pleasing yellow and orange tints in the fall. The purplish-colored fruits, which are covered with a delicate bloom, have a good flavor and make excellent preserves. For seashore planting and bleak locations this is one of the best shrubs to grow. It is also effective in groups or dotted along the edge of woodlands.

Prunus pumila, the sand cherry, is a native of the United States, growing from Maine and Manitoba south to Virginia. The foliage, which is green above, is whitened beneath and in fall is attractive with tints of yellow and red. The numerous clusters of white flowers and dark purple fruit are also prime attractions. For naturalizing purposes this is a useful shrub. At present a watchful eye is necessary, as tent caterpillars have a special fondness for this and one or two allied species.

Syringa oblata, with flowers open in New England May 6, is the earliest of the lilacs to bloom. All the varieties of this beautiful family are carrying an unusual wealth of bloom this season. S. oblata's chief merit is its early blooming. The panicles lack the size and brilliant colors of the later varieties, being of a light mauve color. The foliage is handsome in fall. While the majority of the lilacs hold their green color until frost removes them, S. oblata's leaves take on a beautiful deep red hue.

BOBBINK & ATKINS, Rutherford, N. J.

indicates that the question whether rhododendron and azalea seedlings are "evergreen" has been definitely settled by the court decision recently published in the Review. The letter is as follows:

The Department is in receipt of a letter from the United States attorney for the southern district of New York, in which he reports that suit 4136, United States v. Ouwerkerk, was recently decided by the United States circuit court of appeals for the second circuit adversely to the government.

The merchandise in suit consisted of certain trees and shrubs, which were assessed with duty as "nursery stock" at the rate of 25 per cent ad valorem, and was held by the court to be properly dutiable as "evergreen seedlings" at the rate of $1 per thousand and 15 per cent ad valorem.

The Attorney-General advises the Department that no further proceedings will be directed in this case, and you are, therefore, hereby authorized to forward the usual certified statement for the refund of duties exacted in excess in settlement thereof.

DEUTZIAS.

Few shrubs excel the deutzias for showy blossoms in the early summer. The flower clusters are usually white, displayed prominently and with profuse prodigality, springing from the young wood of the previous year's growth. The flowers do not last long when cut, but their showy effect, with gracefully arching sprays, is well worth enjoying. Most of the species respond readily to cultivation in any fairly good soil, when it is well drained. Many of the best kinds are hardy even in the New England states.

Deutzias should be pruned any time after the leaves have fallen in the late fall or during the winter. The young wood of the previous year's growth must not be cut back, but the old flowering sprays should be removed and weak, spindling wood and decrepit branches cut out. The plants are remarkably free from the attacks of insect pests.

In a recent press notice of the National Council of Horticulture public attention is specially called to Deutzia gracilia, native of Japan, a low, neat-growing shrub seldom over two feet and a half high, with branches slightly arching, from which panicles of white blossoms are abundantly produced. It comes into bloom the first week in June. It is well adapted for planting in the foreground of tall shrubs of similar habit and for massing and grouping at the foundations of buildings, where tall shrubs cannot be used. This is one of the easiest shrubs to force into bloom in a greenhouse.

Deutzia parviflora is a native of northern China and the Amoor country. It is perhaps one of the hardiest species and comes into bloom a week or so after the D. gracilis.

CLEVELAND.

The bank of which Adam Graham is president failed May 14. It was the Reserve Trust Co., with a capital and surplus of $300,000 and liabilities of $2,700,000. It made an assignment to the Superior Savings and Trust Co. A notice was posted saying that it was believed the assets would be sufficient to pay the depositors in full. Inability to realize on outstanding loans is said to have precipitated the failure. The bank was organized in 1903.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.

The regular meeting of the New Haven County Horticultural Society was held May 6. There was a large and enthusiastic attendance. The speaker of the evening was J. F. Huss, gardener at the fine Goodwin estate in Hartford. His subject was "Hardy Ferns and Their Uses," and he handled it in a masterful manner. The speaker at the close of his paper answered many questions on the subject, and was awarded a very hearty vote of thanks. The society took action to have Mr. Huss' paper printed in pamphlet form and distributed among the members, and others who may be interested. The society's garden competition has created a good deal of interest and the secretary reported many competitors. The entries will close May 31.

It was voted to hold a rose show in June and a committee was appointed to attend to the same and report at next meeting. After the business meeting a social time was enjoyed at the expense of the society's bowling team and Captain Nye awarded the prizes won by the following members:

James Moore, two silver cups in high average handicap; William Dickie, most marks, second high single; R. Watson, high single; William Symon, third high average; James Bruce, most marks; D. Ferguson, second high average; T. Webster, fourth high average. T. Pettit in behalf of the bowling team presented Captain Nye with a gold watch fob.

MANKATO, MINN.—The Windmiller Co. recently donated 1,000 cut carnations, as a means of increasing the sum of money which is being raised here in order to secure the location of the new hospital at Mankato. The flowers were placed on sale in a drug store and the proceeds were added to the hospital fund.

MONTREAL.

Current Comment.

Rain, rain and cold is what we have been experiencing for some time. In many of the suburbs the river has completely covered fields and roads, causing much damage.

Business is quieting down, though there have been a number of large funerals recently, at which some beautiful designs were seen.

The annual horse show has given us all a little work, such as decorations for luncheons and dinners. One of the best was done by Sir William Van Horne's gardener, F. Smith. On this occasion jonquils were used in abundance all over the house.

At Campbell's some splendid pink peonies were shown last week, and also good American Beauties.

Bedding plants of all varieties are to be seen in every florist's store.

J. Bennett has been confined to the house with a touch of the grippe.

TOMMY.

ALBANY, N. Y.

The Albany Florists' Club met May 7 in H. G. Eyres', at South Knox and Morris streets. Charles Sanders, foreman for the establishment, exhibited a seedling geranium with bright scarlet flowers of unusual size. He told of his life work also in an interesting manner. In about two years he would have completed half a century in the occupation.

John J. Walsh, head gardener of Washington park, and J. Lang were made members.

PEORIA, ILL.

On account of the excessive rains, most of the bottom land here is under water and the Illinois river is still rising. On the uplands, however, garden truck in sandy soil looks well and prices are fair. There is a poor prospect for a crop of corn, for it cannot be planted while these rains continue and it is now time for the seed to be in the ground.

Greenhouse and hotbed crops were good the latter part of the season. There is every year a great deal of garden truck grown here and quite a lot sent out of town. We have too much for home consumption. There is also considerable fruit grown here, but we had heavy spring frosts and the prospect for a fruit crop is not encouraging.

J. L. H.

EAST HAMILTON, MASS.—Wallace H. Knowlton has increased his greenhouse business this spring, and is handling flowers as well as vegetables.

Capital City Comment.

There is plenty of good stock and everybody is busy with dinners, decorations, funeral work or working for or against the Sunday closing law. Among the florists who have gone on record as being against the Sunday closing law are Geo. C. Shaffer, F. H. Kramer and Henry Small. Peonies are now coming in more plentifully.

United States Chief Forester Gifford Pinchot entertained the governors from the different states and the diplomatic corps. Gude Bros. Co. had the house decoration. Spring flowers were used, with American Beauties, throughout the house.

At the banquet given to the governors and waterways commission by the Board of Trade at the New Willard hotel, J. H. Small & Sons had the table decorations. There were a number of small tables. Vases of roses and spring flowers were used.

F. H. Kramer reports a big business last week, in bedding stock and funeral work.

Geo. Cook is a busy man at present with outdoor work.

Christ Shellhorn's plant is still for sale.

Gude Bros. Co. had the order for the firemen's memorial wreaths. They made sixty-seven of them, Friday, May 15. A wreath is placed on the grave of each deceased fireman.

The Sunday closing bill, which was reported favorably from the District committee May 1, by Senator Johnston, of Alabama, passed the senate May 15 with no material changes, all the committee amendments being agreed to. If it passes the house this week, with no additional amendments, it will become a law this year.

A. Gude dropped in at the sale of a defunct lumber company and bought 50,000 feet of lumber and 3,000 cedar posts. Then he bought the firm's wagon to haul the purchase home with. The auctioneer stopped the sale long enough to inquire if the gentleman from Anacostia did not want to buy the site to erect some greenhouses. O. O.

The Market.

We have been obliged to live through another week of bad business, and bad is a mild word to use in expressing it. The demand for stock of all kinds went down to about nothing. The wholesale men did their best to move the stock at some price and offered it at gift prices, with no takers. The buyers that did visit the wholesale district said there was no business, and they just picked up a little here and there to take care of what few orders they had. Thousands of flowers were sacrificed at starvation prices.

The only busy people were the plantsmen. The warm weather following the late cold spell has stimulated the demand for bedding stock and all of the growers report a heavy demand. Especially was this true in the flower market, where several of the growers report selling out clean for the first time this season.

Roses, carnations, in fact, all the flowers which are in season, were coming in much more heavily than the demand required and, from prospects, this week will be a repetition of last. We have to fall back upon Decoration day to balance things up. We ought to have a good supply of stock then and also a good demand, which ought to mean good business. Let us hope!

New ferns from the south are with us, but they are soft and the buyers prefer to pay the difference and get the cold storage stock, of which there is quite a lot still on the hands of the dealers, but it will doubtless all be used up by Decoration day.

Various Notes.

A sad occurrence was the running over and killing of a little girl by Julius Baer's automobile delivery wagon. The wagon was operated by Harry Baer and he was driving along Brehman street when the child ran right into the machine. It was one of those accidents which could in no way be prevented and Harry Baer has been in every way exonerated in the matter.

H. L. Lauscher, formerly employed here by W. K. Partridge, is visiting in this city, accompanied by his wife. They are on their way to Winona Lake, Ind., where they will spend the summer.

John Walt and wife have both been sick with severe colds. Both are able to be about again. C. J. Ohmer.

GERANIUMS

One of the best things in the market, the American Beauty Geranium, a clear, bright cerise, just about the color of a good Pink Lawson carnation. The habit is very pleasing, rather dwarf and very stocky. It is a common thing to see 4 to 6 large bunches of flowers on a plant in a 3 to 5-inch pot. Clusters average 4 to 5 inches in diameter. It is a very free bloomer; we think it is freer than any we grow and we grow a great many Geraniums. We grow 8 to 10 varieties.

Stock of American Beauty is extra fine but limited as to quantity. We offer you—

2-inch pot plants at $6.00 per 100.
3-inch pot plants at 10.00 "
4-inch pot plants at 1[illegible].00 "
5-inch pot plants at 35.00 "

The 4 and 5-inch pots are very stocky and bushy; have 3 to 5 large flowers on now.

NEW ORLEANS.

Our field roses, which have been bad so far, are coming better every day and some good flowers can be cut now. Asters have been planted quite extensively, but our dry, hot summer is often against them. Still, some growers are successful with them. One of our cut flowers for summer is the tuberose, which is making its appearance just now, the newly imported bulbs seeming to be ahead of the ones kept over from last season.

The Gardeners' Mutual Protective Association celebrated its thirty-third annual festival at the Southern park May 17. Two other associations, the New Orleans Vegetable Growers' and the Shippers' Association, also joined in the festivities. These organizations are all strong and show that this business has had a large increase. Geo. Koch, one of the largest truck gardeners around the city, was grand marshal of the street pageant. M. M. ## WHY SMOKE IS MADE.

If the reader understands why a torch smokes, why a flat wick is used in a lamp, why a circular burner is provided for the student lamp, why a chimney is provided for oil lamps, why a fish tail flame was used in early gas lighting, or why a vacuum bulb is provided for the incandescent lamp; if he understands these things, he will, it is believed, be able easily to see what conditions are necessary for perfect combustion in boiler furnaces.

If any fuel is to be burned without smoke it must be supplied with the correct amount of air. The torch smokes because the large round wick brings up oil, especially in the center, to which air cannot be supplied. If the air supply through the center tube of our student lamp is shut off, a smoking flame results. The candle with the small wick is an advance over the candle supplied with the large wick. The flame from the flat wick has an extended surface for air supply, while the circular burner not only has maximum surface for air supply, but the air coming up through the center of the tube is heated, making it still better suited to aid combustion and burn a large amount of oil. Thus it is that we have successfully solved the problem of burning a large oil supply without smoke. If we try to increase the oil consumption and turn up our lamps too high, they smoke, and because they are in the room with us we immediately turn them down. Furnaces burning coal sometimes smoke just because they are forced too hard, and because the top of the chimney is not in the room, but in the public's pure air, we do not turn them down but let them smoke.

Air correct in amount is a necessity for complete combustion and the simple experiments with our oil and gas flames should be sufficient evidence to us that only when we are able to supply our furnaces with the correct amount of air shall we be able to control the smoke which it is so easy to make. How much easier our problem would be if, as in the lamp, we could see all that was taking place and could regulate all by a simple knurled brass handle!

INSUFFICIENT BOILER CAPACITY.

I have a house 30x70 feet, with four feet of side glass and the ridge at a height of thirteen feet. It is heated at present by a Wilks hot-water heater, 30x48 inches, made to heat 750 feet of radiation. The piping consists of three 3-inch mains, with twelve 1½-inch returns, one coil in the center and one on each side; four pipes to a coil. We are splendidly protected and when the thermometer registered 38 degrees below zero we held the temperature at 52 degrees, though we thus used an immense quantity of fuel. This year we wish to build a vegetable house, 16x50 feet, with a 2½-foot basement and a low roof. No side glass. This will be at right angles to the other house, and the boiler-room is so arranged as to open into both houses. Will our present boiler handle both houses? How much pipe should there be in each house—one house for a temperature of 60 degrees with an outside temperature of 20 degrees below zero, the other house for vegetables? We could probably get a good, cheap second-hand steam boiler here. Would it pay to change to steam heat? K. I. M.

The boiler in question is not quite large enough to carry the present house, 30x70 feet, at 65 degrees. The piping is not quite sufficient for this temperature. Sixteen 1½-inch returns, with the three 3-inch flow pipes, would make the heating of the house easier. The proposed house, 16x50 feet, can be heated by using one 2½-inch flow pipe and twelve 1½-inch returns. An additional boiler with 750 square feet of heating capacity should be added, however. You would not be justified in changing to steam. You could save a little on piping, but more care in firing would be necessary. Stick to hot water. L. C. C.

Gentlemen:—You can strongly and unhesitatingly recommend the "Eclipse" piston type reducing valve to florists. We have two purchased of you last year. ### The Market.

The first part of last week business was not any too brisk, owing to the inclemency of the weather, but the latter part, as usual, found stock, especially the kind used for the shipping trade, more lively. It is customary, at any rate, to look for Friday and Saturday as good days, even if the other days are slow. Last week found plenty of all kinds of stock to fill all orders. Sweet peas, which now take the place of the violets, are of fine quality and sell readily.

Various Notes.

Hans F. Heine, for the last eight years with Wm. Edlefsen, now known as the Edlefsen-Leideger Co., has severed his connection with that firm and has removed, with his wife, to Starved Rock, Ill.

Gust Pohl has just completed a house 30x108 and intends to build another, 18x 100, as soon as the rush of spring trade is over. He has a fine lot of geraniums, daisies and pansies. With all young carnations in the field, he is now busy transplanting asters.

Heitman & Baerman, carnation growers in Wauwatosa, say they have not made much headway in getting stock into the field, as their soil is of a heavy nature and does not handle so readily as desired after the rainy spell, which has kept the most of them guessing for some time past.

Manke Bros., of North Milwaukee, have been working early and late, taking advantage of all favorable weather.

Nic Zweifel, of North Milwaukee, says, "I hope it won't rain for a while, so I can finish planting carnations, for it's about time they were all in the field." His indoor flowers are still of a fine quality, and quantity not wanting.

The C. C. Pollworth Co. reports business good. The call for spring stock is especially lively. They have just received a carload of palms from Europe.

The Holton & Hunkel Co. has its new range at Brown Deer all covered with glass and, with a large force of help and favorable weather, expects to complete the houses in ten or fourteen days. This firm is handling some extra fine sweet peas, which are shipped in from Watertown, Wis.

The annual May ball, which took place May 14, was a grand success, both financially and otherwise, for everyone who attended pronounced it a swell time. As in former years, it rained all day and night, but even that did not prevent a large number from going, for the large hall was filled with young and old, who stayed till early next morning. But give credit to whom it belongs, which in this case falls to the entertainment committee, consisting of G. Rusch, C. C. Pollworth and A. Leideger, whose untiring energy and work gave the grand results.

Wm. K. Kroeschell, of Kroeschell Bros. Co., Chicago, was in town May 16. He said that Fred Lautenschlager, a representative of their firm, would be present and give a short talk about boilers at the next meeting of the Milwaukee Florists' Club, if desirable.

WHY SMOKE IS MADE.

If the reader understands why a torch smokes, why a flat wick is used in a lamp, why a circular burner is provided for the student lamp, why a chimney is provided for oil lamps, why a fish tail flame was used in early gas lighting, or why a vacuum bulb is provided for the incandescent lamp; if he understands these things, he will, it is believed, be able easily to see what conditions are necessary for perfect combustion in boiler furnaces.

If any fuel is to be burned without smoke it must be supplied with the correct amount of air. The torch smokes because the large round wick brings up oil, especially in the center, to which air cannot be supplied. If the air supply through the center tube of our student lamp is shut off, a smoking flame results. The candle with the small wick is an advance over the candle supplied with the large wick. The flame from the flat wick has an extended surface for air supply, while the circular burner not only has maximum surface for air supply, but the air coming up through the center of the tube is heated, making it still better suited to aid combustion and burn a large amount of oil. Thus it is that we have successfully solved the problem of burning a large oil supply without smoke. If we try to increase the oil consumption and turn up our lamps too high, they smoke, and because they are in the room with us we immediately turn them down. Furnaces burning coal sometimes smoke just because they are forced too hard, and because the top of the chimney is not in the room, but in the public's pure air, we do not turn them down but let them smoke.

Air correct in amount is a necessity for compiete combustion and the simple experiments with our oil and gas flames should be sufficient evidence to us that only when we are able to supply our furnaces with the correct amount of air shall we be able to control the smoke which it is so easy to make. How much easier our problem would be if, as in the lamp, we could see all that was taking place and could regulate all by a simple knurled brass handle!

INSUFFICIENT BOILER CAPACITY.

I have a house 30x70 feet, with four feet of side glass and the ridge at a height of thirteen feet. It is heated at present by a Wilks hot-water heater, 30x48 inches, made to heat 750 feet of radiation. The piping consists of three 3-inch mains, with twelve 1½-inch returns, one coil in the center and one on each side; four pipes to a coil. We are splendidly protected and when the thermometer registered 38 degrees below zero we held the temperature at 52 degrees, though we thus used an immense quantity of fuel. This year we wish to build a vegetable house, 16x50 feet, with a 2½-foot basement and a low roof. No side glass. This will be at right angles to the other house, and the boiler-room is so arranged as to open into both houses. Will our present boiler handle both houses? How much pipe should there be in each house—one house for a temperature of 60 degrees with an outside temperature of 20 degrees below zero, the other house for vegetables? We could probably get a good, cheap second-hand steam boiler here. Would it pay to change to steam heat? K. I. M.

The boiler in question is not quite large enough to carry the present house, 30x70 feet, at 65 degrees. The piping is not quite sufficient for this temperature. Sixteen 1½-inch returns, with the three 3-inch flow pipes, would make the heating of the house easier. The proposed house, 16x50 feet, can be heated by using one 2½-inch flow pipe and twelve 1½-inch returns. An additional boiler with 750 square feet of heating capacity should be added, however. You would not be justified in changing to steam. You could save a little on piping, but more care in firing would be necessary. Stick to hot water. L. C. C.

Hot Water Boiler made in 15 sizes, heating from the smallest greenhouse up to 50,000 square feet of glass to 60 degrees at 15 degrees below zero.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.

The Market.

The cut flower trade here is good. There is a good demand for carnations. They are a little off crop now, around here; 35 cents per dozen retail is the price asked. One faker here takes up his stand every Saturday in front of the Parker house, with his usual bargains—carnations 25 cents per dozen and roses the same price. This is hardly fair to the uptown florists, who are under big expense, and the man who sells to these fakers is doing the retailers here an injustice. Good roses bring $1.50 per dozen.

Bulb stock from indoors is about all gone. Tulips are in full bloom outdoors, and the parks and commons here present a gay appearance. Gladioli have now made their appearance here.

Tomato plants are selling well. A great quantity of these is sold here annually.

Florists are now busy booking orders for Memorial day. There will be a good supply of stock here for the occasion.

Various Notes.

Wm. P. Peirce, on Union street, had a nice window display last Saturday. He had some choice carnation blooms.

J. H. Cleary is handling an immense lot of carnations daily. Hoxie, of Mattapoisett, is now consigning to him his entire cut.

A. B. Hathaway has a fine batch of geraniums for the spring trade.

H. A. Jahn will have a good cut of carnations for Memorial day. He has most of his young stock already planted out.

Funeral work is good here. This uses up lots of short stuff.

R. H. Woodhouse will have a house of stocks for Memorial day which will be hard to beat. He is busy now planting trees and shrubs.

We are now having fair, warm weather.

GOSHEN, IND.—A brick building will soon be erected at the corner of Main and Jefferson streets, and Miss Dora Brown, proprietor of the Colonial Flower Shop, will remove to the new structure as soon as it is ready for occupancy. In the builder's plans, which have already been drafted, provision is made for the construction of a greenhouse at the south side of the store.

THE EVERLASTING TILE BENCH

Made in two styles of double compartment tiles. The slabs which form the surface of the bench are 15 inches wide and any length up to 26 inches. The height of the bench is 19 inches, 24 inches to top of 5-inch side board, making it a desirable working height. The slabs are burnt so as to be porous, and are provided with a ridge on either side of the bottom which fits into and interlocks in the upper end of standards or legs, and when the bench is set up it is impossible for it to fall down, no mortar or cement being required in the erection of the bench.

Side boards are held in place by a small clamp, which is driven into the hollow space in the tile slab about every 4 or 5 feet apart. Steam pipes can be very easily arranged underneath or around the outside.

SOME GOOD POINTS OF THE EVERLASTING TILE BENCH:

Quicker to put up than a wooden bench.
Does not require skilled labor to erect it.
It is no home for bugs.
Will never sag or fall down, as it has more support than any other bench.
Has plenty of drainage.
It is porous, making it more practical from a grower's point of view.
Never becomes unsightly or has to be repaired.
It will last a lifetime.
In filling this bench you can wheel on the tile without breaking it.

Three Reasons Why You Should Use Our Material

In the first place all of our material is very smoothly machined and not rough like some of the greenhouse material you see—this means a saving on paint and on the time required to do the painting.

In the second place all of our material is cut and fitted at the factory by a special system which others have unsuccessfully tried to imitate, and when you come to put up your house everything will go in its right place without trouble—this means a great saving on the erecting.

Last, but not least, the repair bills are cut in half, as we are so careful in the making and in looking for the defects that our material stands the test and your greenhouse stands by you.

Isn't it convincing when you know that we get three out of every five jobs we figure on?

THE RETAIL FLORIST.....

THE GIRL AND THE PEONIES.

This is peony season, and all the retail florists are making liberal use of this showy flower. The accompanying illustration is a portrait of Miss Reba McNamara, the retail florist at Omaha. The photograph was made at the home of J. F. Rosenfield, at West Point, Neb., about ten days ago and shows Miss McNamara with her arms full of the Mme. Lebon peony, a beautiful, brilliant cherry red flower and one of the early blooming sorts. Miss McNamara thinks there is no flower, unless it is the chrysanthemum, which is the equal of the peony for bold decorative effects, and she uses the peony extensively in her spring wedding work. Mr. Rosenfield says the peonies have been making rapid progress in the latter part of May, but that many of the buds were destroyed by frost at the end of April. Both Miss McNamara and Mr. Rosenfield agree that spring trade was excellent, with a prospect of first-class business through June, and Mr. Rosenfield says the popularity of the peony is only at a beginning; many orders already are being booked for plants for fall delivery.

WEDDING LUCK.

Every few days the florist is asked what "luck" goes with a wedding in a certain month. George C. Baker says printing such matter on a retail advertisement insures the circular a reading, so here you are:

Marry when the year is new,
Always loving, kind and true.

When February birds do mate,
You may wed, nor dread your fate.

If you marry when March winds blow,
Joy and sorrow both you'll know.

Marry in April when you can,
Joy for maiden and for man.

Marry in the month of May,
You will surely rue the day.

Marry when June roses blow,
Over land and sea you'll go.

They who in July do wed,
Must labor always for their bread.

All who wed in August be,
Many a change are sure to see.

Marry in September's shine,
Your living will be rich and fine.

If in October you do marry,
Love will come, but riches tarry.

If you wed in bleak November,
Only joy will come, remember.

When December's snows fall fast,
If you marry, love will last.

It will be noted that the author of these brilliant and prophetic lines was careful to see that something pleasant was in prospect for all save those who wed in July and August, when the florist is on his vacation.

FUNERAL WORK.

Odd Fellow Designs.

The main feature in making up an Odd Fellow's design is to work in two colors in such a way that the different links will be distinguishable. The links should have the appearance of being interlocked. This, of course, will be a hard matter to carry out on a small design, but on a large one can be easily accomplished.

Pillows.

Of all the designs we are called upon to make, the pillow is no doubt the one most often asked for. There are an endless number of ways of making pillows. Often you will run across a pillow made up so as to appear almost square. This spoils the effect. Each of the four sides should have that rounded in effect, which gives nice, pointed corners. Also, you must see that the top is not too flat. Just keep a freshly shaken up pillow, such as you see on the bed at home, in mind and you will not be so apt to go wrong. When lettering is put on the piece, avoid having it set so deep as to be almost invisible.

Scroll or Roll of Honor.

The scroll is a design that should always bring a good price, as it can only be made up nicely in a large size. It should be made up so as to appear what the name implies—a roll of paper.

Although lettering is not absolutely necessary, it looks well to have lettering on a scroll. The edges should be made carefully. Where the scroll turns under, small galax leaves can be used nicely.

A border of violets or some such flower looks well on a scroll. When no lettering is used, a large loose bunch will fill out the center nicely.

The Sickle.

Small flowers should be used in making up a sickle. Care should be taken when making the handle so that it is distinguishable from the rest of the piece. In fact, unless this is done the design will not look like much of anything. A good point is also essential.

Square and Compass.

As in the case of the Odd Fellow's design, it is necessary to use two colors when making up a square and compass, or any design of this class. See that the square is really square. The compass should be made of the darker flower and should appear to be resting on the square. The letter "G" should be made of wire and then covered with chenille.

The Star.

A star makes one of the prettiest of designs. Great care must be exercised so as to get good points. The center of the piece should be high and it should taper toward the points. When called upon to make up a star for the ladies' auxiliary of the Masons or, in other words, the Eastern Star, five colors are necessary, namely, red, blue, yellow, white and green. Each color should run to the center of the star, ending in a point.

Bases for Various Designs.

There are numerous ways of making up a base for designs. Often all that is needed is to cover the base with galax leaves. To do this nicely stem two together, the same as for a wreath. Then commence at the bottom of the base and insert the leaves over one another, working upward, the same as you work along in making a wreath of galax leaves. When your base is a long one, as on a gates ajar, a good plan is to arrange some flowers nicely on one side and balance the design on the other side with some green, using probably some small cycas leaves in with the rest. On an extra large base some calla or other lilies look well.

Many florists overdo the use of cycas leaves in a base. These look fine when used judiciously, but not when a number of 24-inch leaves are stuck in the base of a small design. When you have lettering to put on a base, unless by special request, do not have the letters so large as to cover the whole base.

Now, to make a long story short, there are a hundred and one ways of making up floral designs; in fact, no two are ever made just alike. Neither do any two florists make their work alike. As this is a fact, it is impossible to make any set rules. Therefore my advice to the beginner is, when working on a design, keep in mind the design, or rather article you are trying to represent, adding such embellishment as will add to the general appearance of the piece without making a wreath look like a doughnut without a hole in it.

BEGONIAS.

Hints on Handling Lorraine.

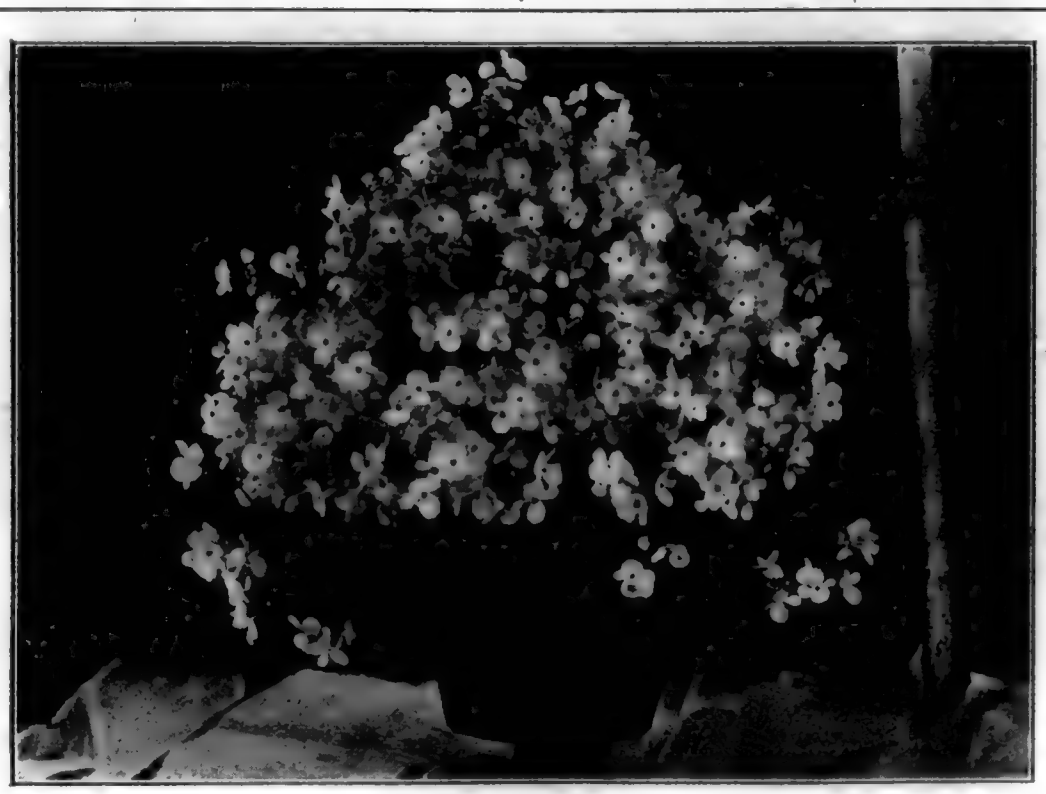
At this season it will be timely to give a few hints on the care of winter-flowering begonias, especially Begonia Gloire de Lorraine and its types, for the time is close at hand when those who do not propagate their own stock will be receiving their plants from the wholesale plantsman for growing on and flowering.

The propagation by leaf-cuttings takes place here from November till January. The stems of single leaves are inserted firmly in the sand bed, about one inch deep, where they remain from six to seven weeks. Great care is exercised in watering, and a temperature of 62 to 65 degrees at night is maintained during this period.

In January, or when the leaves are well rooted, they are potted singly into 2-inch pots, in a compost of two parts loam and one part sand. Here one must exercise the greatest care in watering, as during continued damp and rainy weather they are liable to damp and rot off. From this time on, the night temperature is kept at from 60 to 62 degrees.

About June 1 these leaf cuttings should have become nice little plants, with several shoots coming up from the center of each one. They then are ready to ship, or to repot into 3-inch or 4-inch pots. At this time use two parts loam, one part sand, and about ten per cent of old, well-rotted cow manure.



They should at all times be moderately shaded. The young plants like some sun, but not too much. On the other hand, too deep shade does more harm than good. Watering at all times must be done carefully, for they don't like extremes, either too wet or too dry. During the growing season, however, they require an abundance of water, but should be allowed to dry out fairly well every time, then watered thoroughly.

The final repotting of Begonia Gloire de Lorraine and its varieties is done in August, into 6-inch or 7-inch pots. For this shift use two parts loam, one part sand, and one part well-rotted cow manure. Allow plenty of space between the pots when placed on the bench. As a preventive from insects, tobacco stems are put between the pots, and these should be changed every four weeks. Do not syringe the plants overhead at any time. During continued dull or rainy weather, keep the plants and greenhouse as dry as possible.

In September begin tying up. For training plants, one stick in the center is quite sufficient. During fall and winter months a temperature of 58 to 60 degrees at night is enough for their well-being.

The culture of Lorraine is really quite simple, consisting principally of careful attention—failure, in nearly every case, is due to neglect—and I hope these few lines may help to put more growers on the right lines for success with this beautiful winter-flowering plant.

Lorraine Begonia from Leaf Cutting.

DRYING OFF CALLAS.

How soon, and how, should callas be dried off for the summer? The plants in question are large ones and have been in a solid bench all winter. Should the plants or bulbs be lifted or left in the bench? Should water be withheld altogether, or daily syringings be given? How soon in the fall can they be started and in what manner? This is our first attempt at solid bench planting for cutting and has been much more satisfactory than pot culture. L.

The blooming period for callas being now practically over, the callas should be kept drier at the root from this time. In the case of pot plants, these can be laid on their sides outdoors in a sunny spot. It is not wise to dry off too suddenly. If, however, you want to use the bench for some summer crop, you can dig them up now, packing them in boxes of earth, and stand either on an unoccupied bench or outdoors. Give them a little water after lifting and light syringings for a couple of weeks. Then keep quite dry. When the foliage has disappeared, take out the tubers and store in dry sand until you are ready for replanting.

If you wish to increase your plants, select a number of the longer offsets and plant outdoors. These will make quite strong stock by fall and will bloom well next winter. You can either plant the tubers directly into the benches or start separately in pots. If you plant in the benches, be careful not to overwater for a time, or the tubers are liable to decay. I prefer starting them in pots outdoors before planting inside. The beginning of August is a suitable time to start the tubers. C. W.

EXPERIENCE IS BEST TEACHER.

"Experience has taught me," said Wm. Turner, in a recent address before the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, "that some soils will take much more fertilizer than others. I claim there can be no hard and fast lines laid down in regard to how much fertilizer a certain crop shall receive for best results. My theory has always been that each grower in different localities, and different soils, by studying the condition of his growing crops, is the best judge as to how much feeding will be of benefit. I have no doubt there are various opinions on this important subject, but the grower who carves his own road, using his own good judgment, will usually come out the most successful. We know to produce good crops, potash, phosphoric acid and nitrogen is a necessity. This should be applied to the soil in some shape or form. I am confident whoever has given this question study and deep thought will stand by his own good judgment; self-taught experience one never forgets.''

GREENHOUSE MATERIALS.

Experiments in Prevention of Decay.

During the coming year the government will extend its experiments in wood preservation to cover an entirely new field—the work of treating greenhouse timbers.

Decay takes place very rapidly under the conditions of high humidity always found in greenhouses and horticultural buildings. The timber at present employed in the construction of such buildings consists for the most part of the naturally durable and relatively expensive kinds, such as select cypress and white pine. By a preservation treatment other cheaper and less durable species can probably be successfully substituted for them, and this can be done at a low cost.

In the treatment of greenhouse timbers several problems must be solved. For instance, it is desirable that the wood used in greenhouse construction be painted white, in order that it will reflect as much light as possible. Consequently, a preservative must be used which will allow the treated timbers to hold a coat of white paint. Again, no preservative can be used which will in any degree affect the growing plants. It is probable, however, that these difficulties can be overcome, and the completion of the investigation will be watched with interest.

The investigations in wood preservation by the use of creosote, which is nothing more than the dead oil of coal tar and of zinc chloride, is considered of such importance by the government that one branch of a bureau in the United States Department of Agriculture—the Office of Wood Preservation in the Forest Service—is given over entirely to the work of experiments in cooperation with railroad companies, mining corporations and individuals who desire to prolong the life of the timber which they use. Advice and practical assistance are furnished to all who request it of the forester at Washington.

SALVIA SNOWDRIFT.

The accompanying illustration shows one of the greenhouses of the Hyde Park Floral Co., Austin, Tex., and in the foreground a row of Salvia Snowdrift, of which Edgar Hall, treasurer of the company, says: "This is a new pure white salvia we have here. It is perfectly hardy, more so than the Shasta daisy, and it stands the sun much better. It is a perennial, coming year after year from the same root, and can be propagated readily by cuttings and also comes true from seed. We never have seen such a salvia, nor have we seen it described in any trade catalogue. If there is anything like it we should be glad to hear of it."

The salvia is a large genus, Bailey stating that it includes about 650 species. The most widely used of all salvias cultivated for ornament is, of course, Salvia splendens, the scarlet sage. A number of species are hardy and of this class there are several with white forms.

Lorraine Begonias.

It is not too late even now to take any nice bottom cuttings from your old stock plants of Lorraine begonias. These will root quite readily in sand and make nice little specimens before Christmas. Plants grown from cuttings are really preferable to those produced from leaves, having a more compact habit and proving more floriferous. Of course, some buyers criticise Gloire de Lorraine because it carries too many flowers, preferring the looser habited plants grown from leaf cuttings, but the majority will be found to choose the other type. It is yet a trifle early to move these begonias into frames. When making their growth they seem to relish fairly warm treatment. Thus we have better success with them in a house kept somewhat close. Do not allow the early rooted cuttings to become potbound, or they will never make presentable plants. Avoid large shifts and make the compost light and porous, always using a good proportion of flaky leaf-mold and sand. These begonias do not want a heavily shaded house, just sufficient whitening on the glass to break the sun's direct rays.

Nephrolepis.

With the passing of Memorial day and the cleaning out of quantities of bedding plants and miscellaneous cut flowers for that occasion, you will now have a good deal of empty bench space. Probably you will be needing some of this for your chrysanthemums, but you can no doubt spare at least one bench to plant out a good batch of nephrolepis runners. If gotten in at once, kept shaded and sprayed overhead for a time, these will speedily take hold of the soil and it is really surprising the growth they will make before fall. If you can spare no greenhouse bench and have considerable coldframe sashes, you can utilize a few of these to good advantage. Shade the glass well. Keep close for a time, but air more freely as the plants become established.

Allamandas.

With the increased solar heat, allamandas are now growing freely, some, in fact, already showing their flowers. The climbing varieties, such as Hendersoni and grandiflora, should have been given a rich surface dressing some time ago. This will now be well filled with active roots, and liquid manure will be beneficial if applied once a week. The variety Williamsi makes an ideal pot plant for summer use, being used quite a little at Newport, R. I., and other fashionable summer reports. If your plants are straggly in habit, it will be best to pinch the soft shoots to try to get them more shapely. While familiarly known as stove plants, the allamandas all succeed finely in any ordinary greenhouse in summer, and even outdoors they will grow and flower satisfactorily. To increase your stock, soft cuttings taken off with a heel will now root freely in sand.

Asters.

The earliest batch of asters planted under glass is now growing apace, the flower stalks being already some inches in height. Keep the surface soil stirred, but do not overwater. They need a generous water supply when the benches are filled with roots, but too much now may produce stem-rot. Keep the plants in the field constantly cultivated. The flowers they will furnish will be of great value, coming in as they do when carnations are puny. It is not too late to sow successional batches of seed; in fact, such sorts as Dwarf Chrysanthemum and Victoria can be started as late as the last of June. With Semple's Comet and Ostrich Plume it is better not to sow after the first week in June. While the late sowings can be made outdoors, it is better to use coldframes for this purpose, where water can be supplied when required.

Gardenias.

Except where they are being specially grown for summer flowering, the gardenia season under glass is practically over. It does not pay to carry over old plants; at least, such has been our own experience. A good stock of cuttings inserted in sand now, kept well shaded, saturated with water and given a close house with a night temperature of 70 to 75 degrees, will be ready to pot off in four weeks or even less. If you want to have success in rooting gardenias, remember that heat and abundant moisture at the root are vital essentials. Having obtained all the cuttings you want, get rid of the old plants, as they are veritable Meccas for mealy bug.

Dahlias.

Although dahlias can be planted a month hence and give good returns, it is better to get them into the ground now. If we were certain killing frosts would hold off until the middle of October, we would rather plant about the middle of June, but with our vicissitudes of climate it is better to start the tubers now. Our experience has always been that the late planted stock, commencing to bloom with cool weather, gives much the finest flowers. Some of your roots will probably throw up several shoots. It is better to reduce these to a solitary one. This, if pinched, will produce a nice, bushy plant, which will be almost self-supporting. Be sure that the cutworms, now fairly abundant, do not destroy your dahlia shoots as they appear. They have a special fondness for such succulent shoots. There are a number of sure cutworm cures on the market; any we have tried are of doubtful value. Poisoning with shorts sweetened with molasses, with Paris green added in sufficient strength to slightly color the whole, is effectual. Dusting soot around the plants has also been found an excellent remedy by many.

Tender Nymphaeas.

It is inadvisable to plant out the more tropical of the water lilies until summer weather seems settled, and the early part of June is usually selected as a suitable season for this work, although in such favored regions as Florida and

Salvia Snowdrift.

Plan of Main Floor of the Cataract House, Niagara Falls, Where the S. A. F. Convention Will be Held August 18-23, 1908.

California it is perfectly safe to get them out in May. In some parts of California the tender sorts will even winter in the open ponds. In our northern states, however, we have the best success by waiting until early June. Such nymphæas as Zanzibariensis, dentata and Devoniensis, with many others of more recent introduction, are among the tender group. Remember that none of these regal aquatics will thrive unless they have an ample supply of compost. As well try to grow good celery and cabbages in gravel as to plant water lilies in a pond without liberal beds of loam and cow manure. You cannot give the plants too much root run, and if one-fourth to one-third is cow manure you will not go far wrong.

Brief Reminders.

Get your new stock of bedding plants into the field without delay. Do not depend on any left-overs.

Spray hardy roses with whale oil soap for aphis. This pest will also be found on euonymus and other shrubs, and should be given no quarter.

Disbud peonies if you want large flowers. Mark specially good kinds as they flower, so that you can increase your stock of them.

Do not neglect the ramblers for next Easter. These should now have made nice canes. Keep them tied up and do not stand them outdoors for some weeks yet.

It is still seasonable to plant gladioli outdoors. These late planted bulbs are better set a trifle deeper than the earlier ones.

Pot off cuttings of ficus rooted by the mossing process. Keep close and spray freely until well rooted in the pots.

Spray Cœlogyne cristata overhead each afternoon, unless the weather is damp and cloudy.

Keep show pelargoniums cool and shady, to prolong the flowering season.

Plant out bouvardias, stevias and any other winter blooming stock needing field culture.

Ply the cultivator freely among all outdoor crops. The more you stir the ground, the faster will the plants grow.

Shear genistas into shape. Pot over and plunge outdoors. Do not plant these out, as they lift poorly.

Keep the little primulas cool and airy. Prepare a frame for them as soon as the bedding rush is over.

Spray candidum lilies and hollyhocks to counteract disease, using Bordeaux mixture of standard strength.

THE TRADES' DISPLAY.

Charles H. Keitsch has lost no time in getting to work since his appointment as superintendent of the trades exhibition at the S. A. F. convention, to be held at Niagara Falls in August. At the time of the meeting of the directors of the society at Niagara Falls, arrangements were made for the use of the entire first floor of the Cataract House, which is one of the largest hotels at the Falls and one of the world's famous hostelries. The main floor gives an area of nearly half an acre and there is outdoor space for those who wish to make such exhibits. The accompanying diagram shows the plan of the main floor of the hotel and the tabling which Mr. Keitsch will provide for exhibitors. The arrangement is perhaps the most convenient which it ever has been possible for the society to make for one of its annual meetings.

Buffalo, as was emphasized at the time of the Pan-American exposition, is situated within one night's ride of more people than are within an equal distance of any other American city. Niagara Falls is practically Buffalo, and probably the largest attendance ever recorded at an S. A. F. convention will be on hand August 18 to 22. Naturally the trade exhibition will be large. The address of Superintendent Keitsch is 810 Main street, Buffalo.

DICKSONS' AT LAW IN DUBLIN.

Referring to the cabled note on the Dickson case at Dublin, which appeared in the REVIEW of May 14, 1908, an English correspondent writes:

Before the Master of the Rolls in the Chancery Court, Dublin, Ireland, an action has just been heard in which Alexander Dickson & Sons, Ltd., of Newtownards and Dublin, sought an injunction against Alexander Dickson & Sons, Woodlawn Nurseries, Dundrum, Dublin county, and at Parliament street, Dublin, restraining them from selling roses or seeds not grown or propagated by the plaintiff company as Dickson's roses or seeds or as Dickson's Irish roses or seeds, and from carrying on the business of nurserymen and seedsmen under the style of Alexander Dickson & Sons, without taking reasonable precautions to clearly distinguish the business from that of the plaintiff company.

Mr. Henry, K. C., counsel for the plaintiff, said the business was founded by Alexander Dickson in 1836. In 1900 the business was formed into a company, trading as Alexander Dickson & Sons, Limited. Their business was known all over the world and their output amounted to nearly half a million roses annually. They had been awarded 2,850 prizes.

The defendant company carried on business until a year or two ago as the Ashbourne Agricultural Co., of which Alexander Dickson was the head, assisted by two sons. The title was now changed and many people were misled by the advertisements of the defendant company, who, though their business was mainly a seed business, headed their advertisements "Alexander Dickson & Sons, Woodlawn Nurseries, the Home of the Rose."

Evidence was given by Alexander Dickson and George Dickson, of the plaintiff company, showing how customers had been misled. The treasurer of the National Rose Society and others gave evidence, and Alexander B. Scott, nurseryman, of Philadelphia, stated that there was no other Dickson known in America but the plaintiff firm.

Mr. Campbell, K. C., in opening the case for the defendant, said his client, Alexander Dickson, had all his life been engaged in Dublin in the seed trade and he did not enter the nursery trade until plaintiffs had seriously attacked him in the seed business.

Defendant, in his evidence, said that he bought the nursery at Dundrum in 1905. It would not have been convenient or desirable to carry on a nursery business under the title of the Ashbourne Agricultural Co.; hence the title "Alexander Dickson & Sons," but he admitted he was the sole proprietor; his sons were not partners in the business.

Counsel replied on behalf of the plaintiffs. On the legal side he admitted that every man was entitled to use his own name in carrying on his own trade, but maintained that he had no right to use his own name for the passing off of his own goods as the goods of his namesake. In the present case he had used his own name plus an addition which was not true in fact, as there was no partnership with his two sons. On the facts, counsel submitted that the defendant had been proved to have used his name for the purpose of obtaining the advantage of the reputation of the plaintiffs.

The Master of the Rolls, in giving judgment, came to the conclusion that the defendant had used for the purpose of his advertisements a name to which he had no right, and a name which was assumed for the purpose of attracting business which belonged to another man. He adopted the name of Alexander Dickson & Sons in revenge against the plaintiff firm for having successfully competed with him for a heavy seed contract with the Agricultural Department. The injunction would be granted, with costs.

SINGLE-STEMMED PLANTS.

Varieties to Choose.

Plants for growing to single stems should be rooted any time in the next ten days or so. The varieties selected for this work are, of course, the dwarfest kinds only, or at least they should be. I am no admirer of a 6-inch pot plant that is three feet high. It destroys the sense of proportion. Such plants look top-heavy, and nothing like a Merza or a Beatrice May that is not over a foot high and is crowned with an exhibition sized flower. Either of these varieties is ideal for this work and they are exhibited every year at the eastern shows in splendid condition.

Other varieties that are always shown in the winning classes are Morton F. Plant, Mrs. A. J. Miller, Cheltoni, F. A. Cobbold, Nellie Pockett, Lady Hopetoun, Glenview, Mrs. G. Heaume and Mrs. H. Partridge. The last named seems to be one of the few varieties that are better when struck late than when started early. One reason for this is that it is a hard, stocky grower naturally, and when it is started too early and gets dried out a few times it takes on a hard, knotty growth that is almost impossible to get growing right again. Such varieties need to be rushed along from start to finish and never allowed to linger by the wayside.

The individuality of different varieties is one of the first things that strike the observant grower, and the kinds that are known as poor doers are always kinds that are very marked in this respect. Take the case of Montigny, for instance. This variety takes ten days longer to root than the average variety and its peculiar habit of wilting on a hot day, combined with a strong disposition on the part of the flowers to spot and burn, has caused it to be discarded by many exhibitors. And yet, as it was set up last fall in New York, it was peerless in every way.

Take also the case of Beatrice May. In the hands of some growers the foliage of this variety spots so badly as to render the flowers almost unsalable. A little study and experiment have proved that in a semi-shaded situation, and with a good proportion of nitrogenous manure applied, Beatrice May produced almost as good foliage as any other variety.

Glory of the Pacific and Polly Pose are two varieties that have never been very satisfactory with me. The plants made such short joints that they were little else but a bunch of leaves with a flower on top. Calling on a grower whose flowers of these varieties are always fine, I found his plants in an old house facing almost north and with heavy sashbars, the resulting shade being just what these kinds needed to draw them up and give the stem a decent length.

These instances could be multiplied almost indefinitely and only go to prove that in growing mums, as in anything else, the largest measure of success will come to the man who studies his business closely and does not leave everything to blind chance.

Getting back to the cutting bench, there is still ample time to propagate for July planting, using the midseason and late varieties. It is not so easy to root plants at this time of year as it is in February or March, unless one has a house for the purpose. The cuttings must be kept from wilting, if possible, and to this end should be kept copiously sprayed, well shaded and free from drafts. A drying wind blowing over the cuttings will do them serious harm. This can be avoided by the use of cheesecloth hanging in front of the bench.

The stock plants from which the cuttings are taken should not get too much water. If they are kept soaked all the time, the cuttings are very soft and will melt away like snow in a spring sun when put into the sand. The happy medium in watering gives cuttings with backbone enough to hold their own and root without so much trouble.

Too Early Buds.

Every spring we hear of some grower who is troubled by his plants running to bud instead of making growth, but never have I heard of such general complaint from the growers as this year, letters reaching me from Pennsylvania, Massachusetts and Illinois during the last week, and all on this subject. In many cases this can be traced directly to the carelessness or inexperience of the grower in repeatedly permitting the plants to get dust-dry, causing them to get hard and hidebound, which condition will invariably produce a crop of buds. In other cases, varieties like W. R. Church, that always go to bud, will cause lots of trouble and worry.

This year, however, I am inclined to believe that climatic conditions have had something to do with the case. It would be hard, perhaps, to say in just what way this has been brought about, but when good and careful growers rise up to testify it can safely be said that the underlying cause is deeper than neglect.

As to a cure for this trouble, I know of none, only to keep the buds closely picked off, and the plant will eventually produce a shoot or sucker that will go ahead and take the lead. When one can get a sucker up from such a plant, it will often make a remarkable growth and catch up with plants that seemed to have it hopelessly beaten. This is due, presumably, to the good roots the plant made while the top growth was checked. CHARLES H. TOTTY.

ORDER OF BLOOMING.

The following is a list of mums I have. Please arrange the names in the order in which they will bloom, the early, the mid-season and the late ones: White Chadwick, Yellow Chadwick, White Bonnaffon, Monrovia, Geo. Pullman, Mrs. Geo. Pullman, Mrs. Perrin, Timothy Eaton, Yellow Eaton, Maj. Bonnaffon, Golden Wedding, C. Touset, Polly Rose, Beatrice May, Ivory, Mrs. Robinson and Alice Byron. L. G.

If all the plants are propagated at the same time and handled the same, they will bloom naturally in the following order: Polly Rose, C. Touset, Beatrice May, Monrovia, Alice Byron, Ivory, Mrs. Robinson, Mrs. Perrin, Geo. Pullman, Mrs. Geo. Pullman, Timothy Eaton, Yellow Eaton, Major Bonnaffon, White Bonnaffon, Golden Wedding, W. H. Chadwick and Yellow Chadwick.

I remarked at the beginning, "if they were handled the same," but if L. G. knows his business he can change conditions very materially. Thus Monrovia, if a bud is taken late in July, will develop by September 27, and, instead of being in fourth place, it can be moved to first place. If the early bud is not taken, Monrovia is naturally a second early variety. The same thing applies in the case of Alice Byron. From buds taken August 6 I have secured splendid flowers of this variety the first week in October. The whole thing is largely a matter of knowing how. It is the same with the later kinds. Some growers plant Bonnaffon late in July and by that means have it in good shape at Thanksgiving and later.

Under ordinary conditions, and as grown by seventy-five per cent of the growers, the varieties will bloom in the order given. C. H. TOTTY.

Sweet Peas and Good Business.

In the REVIEW for May 21 I notice an article published from Philadelphia, which I quote in part: "We are told that outdoor sweet peas will be here before next month, but it is difficult to verify this statement." In answer to this you may say for me that March 5 I planted the following varieties of sweet pea seed: Burpee's Earliest White, Blanche Ferry and Burpee's Earliest of All, and May 19 I cut a fine lot of blooms. Notwithstanding the so-called hard times, the Wheeling flower market in the last six months has been very satisfactory to the florists. The growers in and around Wheeling have also done well and expect Decoration day to bring much business. A. B. BUTLER.

PANSIES FOR WINTER.

Please tell me the best pansy to bloom in the greenhouse and what time to sow the seed to bloom for Christmas.

D. Z.

There are now many choice strains of pansy seed purchasable. I have found Trimardeau satisfactory, the flowers being large, of good substance and the range of colors wide and pleasing.

To have flowers for Christmas, sow the seed outdoors the last week in July. Mulch with strawy manure after seeding, leaving this on until the seedlings appear. Shake the short manure out of the mulching before applying it. Transplant the seedlings into beds when large enough to handle, choosing a moist, cloudy day for the operation. Plant in the greenhouses the last part of October, keeping the plants well up to the light. The temperature given single violets, about 40 degrees at night, will suit pansies. This should not be exceeded, or harm will result.

If you only wish to have a small batch of seedlings, use a coldframe and place a lath or canvas shading over the seeds to keep the ground cooler and moist until they germinate. Do not sow later than August 1. Pansies love a cool, moist house and will need a little shade from the sun by the end of February.

DISEASED GERANIUMS.

In reply to G. J. L.'s inquiry, on page 11 of the Review of May 21, I would say that we have occasionally had such experiences with geraniums as G. J. L. seems to have, and have never come to a satisfactory conclusion as to the real nature of the trouble. We are inclined to think that it is more of an affliction than a disease and that it is peculiar to certain varieties, especially those which have that fuzzy covering of the foliage, such as the sample sent.

It is our opinion, based on careful observation, but without any scientific explanation whatever, that it is caused by an overabundance of moisture in the houses, which is gathered and retained on the foliage of those particular varieties through a peculiarity of the condition of the leaves, until they are scalded by the sun.

As to the trouble appearing just at the time when the plants are wanted for the spring sales, it is just about that time that the sun commences to get power enough to burn.

As for a remedy, or rather a preventive, we endeavor to keep the air as dry as possible, and give plenty of air, especially at night, as we believe that the trouble is caused more by the dew gathering at night than by watering. We also give a slight shading on very bright houses. R. A. Vincent.

In the Review of May 21, G. J. L. writes about diseased geraniums. Last year I had, judging from his description, something of the same trouble. I applied a couple of doses of nitrate of soda in solution and the plants recovered finely. Perhaps this may help G. J. L. L. C. Porter.

COCKROACHES IN GREENHOUSES.

A correspondent relates how a florist has discovered by accident a new way to catch cockroaches. A pint fruit jar containing a scrap of bacon happened to be left over night in one of the greenhouses. Next morning a dozen or more imprisoned cockroaches were vainly trying to escape by climbing the slippery sides of the glass jar. The florist has succeeded in ridding his establishment of these pests, which formerly ate such high-priced plants as orchids and gardenias.

It is necessary to paste a piece of paper on the outside of the jar, so that the insects can get sufficient foothold to climb up into the trap. In the original case the label of the manufacturer supplied this need.

This surely is as easy a way as any to clear out these pests.

CARNATION NOTES.—WEST.

Cultivating.

As soon as you have planted out all your young carnation plants, you should begin to use the cultivator to keep the soil surface broken up and mellow. Last year I recommended, and if you have not finished planting, will repeat that a good plan with soil which packs easily is to go over the day's planting each evening with the cultivator, to loosen the soil between the rows, where it was tramped down in planting. If the soil is sandy and a little dry this is not essential, but in any case it will do no harm.

If the plants are set in moist soil and they get a shower of rain within two or three days, it will suffice to start them off in nice shape, and a good rain once in about each week will keep them growing as rapidly as is desirable. What you want is not so much large plants, as plants which are sturdy and short-jointed, with numerous breaks and well shaped. Well shaped plants can only be had if the young plants stand up straight and, whenever you go over them in topping or for other reasons, always straighten up any plants which may have been washed over by heavy rains or crowded over by the cultivator.

Make a practice of cultivating once every week or oftener, but be sure you cultivate after every rain as soon as the ground can be worked. This helps to hold the moisture and prevents the soil from forming a crust and baking on top. A crust on the soil will not only allow the moisture to evaporate rapidly, but during the hot summer months it will also cause burning of the foliage, etc.

You need not cultivate deeply; from one to two inches is deep enough. Below that the soil may as well be as firm as it is likely to become during the first summer, after being plowed in the spring, providing the surface is kept loose.

With the hand cultivators which are used these days it takes a man only a short time to run over an acre of ground and the oftener it is done the better for the plants.

With each cultivator are several sets of tools and which ones to use must depend on your ground and the condition it is in. If you find it quite mellow and fine, you can use the rake tools. If there are many weeds coming up, use the knives and cut under the surface of the soil. On a hot day this will destroy all the young weeds. If, however, the soil is inclined to be lumpy, we use three of the single teeth, setting them so that they cover the space between the rows. We find these last named the handiest for general use, as they are strong and can be worked into the soil quite deeply, and they do not clog up easily.

We plant our rows just far enough apart so that we need to go only once in each row. To space them wider would mean only extra work in cultivating, without any benefit accruing therefrom.

A. F. J. Baur.

FLOODED FIELDS.

My place is all under water, so that I cannot plant my carnations in the field. It will be a week or two at least before I can get them out and I do not know what to do with it. Could I plant them in the houses now for next winter's bloom? Some of my neighbors tell me they must be out for a while, but it seems to me that by the time I can get them planted in the field there would be so little time left that they would no more than get started to grow before they would have to be taken in again. What would you recommend? A. R.

There is no reason why you could not plant your carnation plants inside, instead of in the field, providing you handle them properly and are willing to assume the extra work entailed. Your plants, if they are in good condition now to plant out, will need to be shifted at once into larger pots, as they will not stand in the small pots until you can get your beds ready for planting without getting potbound and stunted. This, in fact, is one of the main secrets of success with indoor culture. Keep the young plants on the move and never let them get stunted and hard.

I would advise shifting them at once into larger pots. Give them enough of a shift to last nicely until you are ready to bench them. They should be nicely rooted through the new soil at that time. Plunge them to the rim either outside or inside, in cinders or sand, to keep them from drying out too much, as that will cause the plants to harden if the drying out is severe and recurs repeatedly.

Then get your benches ready just as though you were going to plant from the field and set the plants the usual distance apart. Syringing and shading will not be necessary, as with the field-grown plants.

After you get rid of the weeds you can mulch the beds to prevent drying out and then handle them as you would field-grown plants after they are established. A. F. J. B.

A MICHIGAN CARNATION HOUSE.

Flint is not the metropolis of Michigan, but it nevertheless is able to boast of one of the largest and best kept cut flower growing establishments in the state. B. Hasselbring makes a specialty of carnations. The accompanying illustration will give an idea of the character of the construction of his range, which is built along the best commercial lines. This house shows a bench of Lady Bountiful photographed early in May and it will give carnation growers who thought their own crops heavy the idea that "there are others." The picture is interesting as showing that good culture must be practiced and that first-class results are obtained.

The men in the picture are Mr. Hasselbring's growers, George W. Ullrich, foreman, and Charles A. Hart, his assistant.

LILIES IN ENGLAND.

A writer in the Horticultural Advertiser (English) has this to say of the several varieties of Lilium longiflorum: "In the London market 'longi's' is the only name given to all the varieties, and since we have had them all the year through, most of which are from retarded bulbs, little attention has been given to those which would, under ordinary conditions, come into flower earliest. In some reports I find Harrisii, the Bermuda variety, is quoted, but I find that few growers handle this now, for up to the present we are still getting supplies from retarded bulbs. Mr. Page, who grows upwards of 100,000, favors the variety longiflorum giganteum. The variety from Formosa is also grown; this is a newer sort, with broad petals of great substance, one of the best for those who do not have to pack, but it is easily damaged. The variety from the Azores is dwarfer, and makes the best pot plant.

"T. Childs, another large grower, depends entirely on the ordinary form of longiflorum as received from Japan, and has had some good pot plants of various heights. Much depends upon the condition and treatment of bulbs, and it is not always the largest that give the best results."

THE FOUNDATION OF SUCCESS.

Soil for Violet Growing.

Almost any good loam soil will be found suitable for the violet. We prefer rather sandy loam to one in which clay predominates. Soils running from twelve to fifteen per cent clay give about the right physical properties. A soil that will grow a good crop of potatoes—250 to 300 bushels per acre—will furnish the basis for a good violet crop, providing there is sufficient organic matter in it. We prefer in all cases to have some of this organic matter in the form of rotted turf, hence it is our practice to secure sod and allow this to rot down. To four parts of well-rotted sod soil we add one part of thoroughly decomposed stable manure.

We have no preference in the matter of manure, as to whether it is from cows or horses. If it has been well handled, not fire-fanged, thoroughly decayed, we have never been able to see any difference one way or the other. Horse manure, however, is perhaps preferable, as it is more easily handled. We do not add any chemical fertilizers, nor do we advocate them where good decayed manure is available. Florists are prone to err on the side of using too much of this sort of material. Our experimental work, extending over ten or fifteen years on various crops, leads us to believe that as a rule there is more harm done through the application of bone and similar fertilizer than there is real good secured. This may seem a somewhat broad statement, but it may be supported by experimental evidence.

Another important consideration in the matter of soil is to have it thoroughly worked over before it goes into the beds, and if practicable to let the frost work through it. To accomplish this we prefer to secure our soil in the fall, stack it fourteen to eighteen inches high and let it thoroughly freeze. This freezing destroys many grubs, nematodes, and other pests, which are apt to be destructive the following season, unless care is exercised.

As one of the important factors connected with the foundations of successful violet growing, too much stress cannot be laid upon the necessity for a change of soil each year. I feel convinced that many of the failures in growing this crop may be traced directly to the non-recognition of this important matter. The soil looks so good in the spring, and it is such a job to take it out and put in fresh material, that the grower is prone to procrastinate and either try it over again for another season or else remove only a portion of it. We have always advocated the use of not less than six inches of fresh soil each season, believing it far cheaper to expend a few dollars in the preparation of good soil than it is to cut down the crop of flowers, either through starvation or the cumulative effect of diseases and insects.

Mildew.

At this season mildew is one of our most persistent enemies, and to keep the plants clear of this pest requires great care and patience. With the houses left open so much and with the sudden, frequent fluctuations of temperature, we have just the conditions which suit the germination and spread of this fungus.

Careful ventilation and a dusting of the flowers of sulphur once a week will help to keep it in check. Where there is a bad dose of it, shutting the ventilators while the sun is shining and applying the powder while the temperature approaches the 100 degree mark will have a good effect. Care, however, should be taken not to let the house remain long at this temperature, as the foliage may suffer.

The Necessary Moisture.

Young stock in pots will require careful watching. Where the pots are well filled with roots, they should be kept from any approach to drying out, as this gives them a check from which it takes them a long time to recover.

In stock houses where part of the stock has been removed, it is well to keep the sand or ashes on the empty spaces of the bench well watered, as it helps to keep the house cool and supplies the requisite amount of moisture in the house.

These small matters may seem trivial, but there is no condition too minute for the grower to note if he wishes success.

In recently planted houses where root action has well started, the surface of the soil should be cultivated at least once a week, to the depth of an inch. By keeping the surface of the soil in good condition, the plants can use more water, which means more rapid growth.

RIBES.

EEL WORMS ON ROSES.

Some brother florists have proved to me that my roses have eel worms. Now, I had my young stock all ready and in pots. I am told that cuttings taken from plants that have eel worms are also affected. Is it necessary that I throw all this young stock away and buy new stock? If so, how could I know but the man I buy from may have eel worms in his stock also? Or can young plants in 2½-inch pots be disinfected with formaldehyde or something else? My soil for this year was piled up last fall and mixed with manure. Had I better steam the soil, or what would you suggest?

F. S. W.

It is still an unsettled question whether the worms ascend with the sap into the wood that would be suitable for cuttings or scions, but there is no doubt that cuttings taken from eel-infested stock are so low in vitality that they become an easy prey to the same trouble. In fact, they are very susceptible to all rose troubles and are risky stock.

Because of the fact that eel worms seek protection by encysting themselves in the roots of their hosts, they are difficult to reach. I have not tried formaldehyde, nor have I heard of anyone using it for this purpose and I am rather inclined to doubt its efficacy.

Cooking the soil with steam will certainly destroy the pests.

Bisulphide of carbon, evaporated in the house, would, no doubt, destroy the pests, were it not for the fact that they are, because of the encysting, beyond the reach of the vapor.

BREEDING WILD ROSES.

[A paper by W. Van Fleet, Little Silver, N. J., read before the American Breeders' Association, at the Washington convention, January 28 to 30, 1908.]

When it is considered that more than 11,000 rose varieties were listed by Simon in 1906, that countless varieties have fallen out of record, that about a hundred new ones are commercially introduced each year and that of this vast host scarcely fifty, all told, are suited for culture in ordinary American gardens, it will be realized that radical changes in the ideals and methods of breeding are needed, if the really hardy garden types of roses are to be advanced in public favor. By hardiness is meant not only frost resistance, but resistance as well to fungous disorders, such as leaf mildew and black spot. The latter is the bane of modern rose gardens and effectually bars the outdoor cultivation of scores of the most desirable varieties of the hybrid perpetual and hybrid tea classes. Apparently the only means of overcoming this serious defect and of breeding in new and distinct characters is by the free use of vigorous species and well fixed natural varieties. Something has been accomplished within the last fifteen years by the use of such robust Asiatic species as Rosa rugosa, R. Wichuraiana and R. multiflora, but the surface of hardy rose breeding possibilities can scarcely be said to have been scratched.

Difficulties of the Work.

The work of breeding wild roses by selection and hybridization with kindred species and garden varieties is arduous, slow and affords only an infinitesimal chance for pecuniary returns. The standard of perfection in rose blooms is now high and only those approaching in finish the difficult varieties are likely to be tolerated, even if borne on the most rugged plants. The writer has been working with native and old-world species for many years with moderate success, but at nothing like the rate of progress that was hoped for at the outset. Native roses are particularly trying, many appearing sterile with any but their own pollen, while others, though susceptible to hybridization, show little change in the cross-bred progeny. Rosa lucida rarely perfects seeds when treated with foreign pollen. Out of, perhaps, 1,000 pollinations with many species and varieties, perhaps a dozen hybrids of this common eastern species with R. rugosa and R. spinosissima were raised. In the rugosa cross the plant is more vigorous and thorny, with larger single flowers and broad, shining, but not rugose foliage. The Scotch rose hybrid is of weak growth, with pale, imperfect blooms; not promising. Three successive generations of lucida-rugosa seedlings, most of them pollinated with other rose species and varieties, have been grown, but no further changes are apparent. R. lucida with R. Wichuraiana, however, has yielded one of the most robust hybrids we have ever seen, of semi-sarmentose or climbing habit, with profuse corymbs of large, single, blush-white blooms. A plant in six years' growth, without support, forms a mound of foliage eight feet high and more in diameter.

Other Native Species.

No success has rewarded attempts to breed R. Carolina, R. Fendleri, R. Woodsii, R. Arkansana and R. Sayi, which latter appears to be regarded as a variety of R. acicularis. All are completely sterile to foreign pollen under our cultural conditions. The self-fertilized seedlings of R. Sayi vary considerably and superior varieties might in time be developed by selection.

R. nitida has proved the most tractable of this type of rose. Very handsome hybrids with single to quite double blooms, of good size, ranging in color from light pink to deep crimson, have been secured by first crossing with double flowering varieties of R. rugosa and breeding the hybrids to the most robust hybrid perpetuals. The habit of the secondary crosses is upright, with abundant shining rugose foliage and prickly stems. They bloom abundantly in spring and occasionally during summer. The fruits are intermediate in size between those of the parent species, but endure until late autumn.

R. setigera has been disappointing. There is little difficulty in securing densely double-flowering hybrids of good color, but the plants fall off in vigor and do not maintain effective foliage. A pretty cross or two was made with tea roses, but the plants were tender and very susceptible to mildew. The species is hardy, resistant and deserves further attention, as it is credited with producing Prairie Queen and other useful hardy climbers as a result of crossing with Noisette roses.

Foreign Species.

R. ferruginea produced, when crossed with a hybrid China variety, a beautiful bright pink bloom of moderate size, so dense-double that it is a veritable pompon, borne on a stout, thornless plant with reddish foliage. Unfortunately, this very interesting hybrid is difficult to propagate and may soon be lost.

R. moschata, crossed with garden varieties of the Bourbon rose, has given some attractive and free-blooming dwarf plants, with large single and double flowers, deep colors of red predominating. There is more tendency to stripings and variegations with lighter colors than in the seedlings of any other species.

R. rubiginosa blends freely with many other hardy varieties, but crosses with difficulty, if at all, with roses containing blood of the tea-scented kinds. Several hundred seedlings have been raised, most of them equal, but few superior, to those produced by Lord Penzance, of England. A selected rubiginosa x Fisher Holmes (hybrid perpetual) grows ten feet high and produces very brilliant semi-double crimson flowers, followed by large clusters of conspicuous orange red fruits.

WILLIAM H. ELLIOTT.

The splendid Killarney roses grown at Madbury, N. H., and exhibited at Boston and Chicago recently, have drawn attention to William H. Elliott, the producer of these remarkable flowers. Mr. Elliott was born at Lancaster, Wis., a little less than half a century ago. Leaving there when quite young, he went to New London, Conn. After leaving school he made up his mind to learn the florists' business and worked with the late John Spaulding, of that city, for several years. He next moved to Boston and first worked at Dorchester for a short time, going from there to the Waban Rose Conservatories of E. M. Wood & Co. He acted as salesman for this well-known firm in Boston, New York and Philadelphia for between two and three years.

Mr. Elliott next worked for J. Heustis, whose private place was run on a commercial basis. He was very successfull while here and, on leaving, purchased the W. C. Strong place in Brighton in 1884. His capital was small, but he had skill, grit and a determination to succeed. Roses were the only flowers grown at Brighton until 1893, when the horticultural world was somewhat startled by the erection of the now well-known and lofty structure for the culture of Asparagus plumosus, which gave the builder the title, still retained, of the "Asparagus King."

In 1902 Mr. Elliott rather amazed local growers by the purchase of over 200 acres of land at Madbury, N. H. Their astonishment increased when it was found that he actually intended to erect greenhouses so far away from Boston. His first big house was built in 1902. Beauties were first grown, these later being discarded for Liberty, which had to give way to Richmond and Killarney, which are the reigning queens in the two mammoth houses at Madbury. Splendid loam and convenience to the railroad make the New Hampshire establishment an ideal one. At Brighton, Bride and Maid are chiefly grown, also some summer roses, Asparagus plumosus and A. Sprengeri, with some pot chrysanthemums to complete the list.

Mr. Elliott ever has been a man of few words, but whenever he has been induced to speak on any subject it has been found that his thoughts have not been idle. His ideas are practical and his elucidation of them always brief and to the point. No better illustration of his methods of thought can be found than his discussion of the best size of rose house at the Chicago meeting of the Rose Society.

Mr. Elliott has ever been a stalwart supporter of the S. A. F., in which he has been a director. He is one of the best backers of the American Rose Society. He is one of the trustees of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, of which he has been a member for many years. The Gardeners' and Florists' Club of Boston can count him among the pioneers who founded it in 1887. In 1888, 1889 and 1890 he filled the post of financial secretary in this society, being vice-president in 1894 and president in 1899 and 1900. He is a past director in the Park Street flower market and one of its strongest men. In the way of fraternal societies, Mr. Elliott belongs only to the Royal Arcanum, which he counts among the best extant.

The year before he purchased his present Brighton plant Mr. Elliott married his cousin, Miss Knight, of New London. Mrs. Elliott visits many of the conventions with her husband and takes a keen interest in things horticultural. A family of five braw bairnies, three boys and two girls, make the comfortable Brighton home complete. The oldest son, George, has now been associated with his father at Madbury for a year and promises to be a "chip of the old block." While a very hard working man, Mr. Elliott takes occasional recreations, the West Indies being his favorite objective point.

OBITUARY.

William Scott.

The funeral of the late William Scott, of Buffalo, May 21, was largely attended by Buffalo friends, including members of St. Andrew's Scottish Society and fifty florists of Buffalo; delegations from Rochester and Lockport. Designs and telegrams were received from Chicago to New York city and also Canadian cities. The honorary bearers were Wm. F. Kasting, Chas. Stoddart, David Cloudsley, Peter Crowe, George W. McClure, D. B. Farquhar, George Troup, Wm. J. Palmer and Wm. Belsey. The active bearers were Wm. Warring, Wm. Hewson, Louis H. Neubeck, David Beveridge, Jas. Nielson and Chas. Sandiford.

Both the Buffalo Florists' Club and the St. Andrew's Society held special meetings last week and adopted suitable resolutions.

Reading G. Palmer.

Reading G. Palmer died at Otis, near Perkassie, Bucks county, Pa., May 20, aged 39 years. Mr. Palmer first came into prominence as a grower of Brides and Maids at Doylestown, Pa., about twelve years ago. He was an excellent example of the grower-salesman. When the Philadelphia Wholesale Flower Market was started, about five years ago, Mr. Palmer was elected treasurer. Later, failing health and reverses compelled him to dispose of his greenhouse business, and seek employment in the wholesale commission business, where his former customers gladly welcomed him. He was first with Eugene Bernheimer, and later with Alfred M. Campbell. Mr. Palmer was of a genial disposition and left a host of friends. He is survived by a widow, two sons and a daughter.

George McRae.

George McRae died May 17 at his home at Cheswick, Pa. He was a member of the McRae-Jenkinson Co.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

Incorporated by Act of Congress March 4, '01

Officers for 1908: President, F. H. Traendly, New York; vice-president, George W. McClure, Buffalo; secretary, Willis N. Rudd, Morgan Park, Ill.; treasurer, H. B. Beatty, Pittsburg.

Annual convention, Niagara Falls, August 18 to 21, 1908.

First National Flower Show, Chicago, November 9 to 15, 1908; W. F. Kasting, Buffalo, chairman.

Results bring advertising.
The Review brings results.

The circulation of the Review is greater in the State of New York than in any other State in the Union.

Business in all lines in the grain states is just as good as it ever was, this spring, and possibly just a little bit better than before.

J. H. Burdett has begun the exploitation of the national flower show in the newspapers of the country, sending out the press notices with those of the National Council of Horticulture.

The wistaria is a good vine for a trellis, but is somewhat coarse for verandas, being better suited for the rustic house or pergola, where its delightful purple flowers hang in graceful profusion.

The big department stores open with their customers what are called "accommodation accounts." It is a term retail florists might well adopt, especially as accommodation accounts are understood to be payable monthly.

William Scott, as chief of floriculture at the Pan-American Exposition, gave a demonstration of what a gardener who knows his business can do under circumstances far from favorable for securing the results that are demanded.

To those who are disinterested it is amusing to hear a man howl when he sees the things he has been accustomed to do every day done by the fellow in the next block. Who is doing a thing makes all the difference in the world, don't you know!

August Rolker & Sons, New York, quote the following from a letter from August Haerens, of Somergem, Belgium: "As to the fan-shaped azaleas, it is strange that they find no more favor in America, while on the Continent everyone likes them at sight. Naturally, they can not be cheap, as they require too much care and labor, and take up as much house room as do the pyramids. But we intend to go ahead with them and grow from 300 to 500 every year."

WILLIAM SCOTT.

A Tribute.

William Scott is no more!

Thus an active life, a life replete with brilliant ideas and brilliant achievements along the lines of practical horticulture, has come to a close.

Friends and strangers alike, those who were privileged to know him intimately, as well as those who were guided by his practical advice and timely suggestions through the horticultural press, will unite in mourning the great loss to horticulture. No longer will his brilliant pen, like a veritable beacon light, guide the novice and the uninitiated along the path of practical floriculture. No longer will his voice be heard in counsel for the benefit of his brother florists throughout the American continent.

His mental qualities, his keen judgment, his power of observation and his trained intellect have assigned him a place in the ranks of the very few men in the trade whose memory will live long after the present and rising generation of florists shall have joined the great majority.

Well, and without any presumption on his part, might he have said with the great Russian poet Pushkin: "My monument is built, not of stone nor by hand, but of the work I have accomplished in life."

Great men are those who accomplish results, whether it be on the battlefield, in the legislative hall or in the humble greenhouse.

Peace be to thy ashes, thou noble friend!

S. S. Skidelsky.

THE WEATHER.

The weather of the last week is summarized as follows: "Very heavy rains fell over a large part of Texas and generally throughout Oklahoma and in portions of the upper Mississippi and Red River of the North valleys and northern Rocky Mountain regions. Damaging freshets occurred in Texas and much low land in Oklahoma and Louisiana was flooded. There were several local storms in the western portion of the upper lake region and also in Texas and portions of the South Atlantic states during the fore part of the week, but most of the country experienced no damaging local storms. There was much cloudiness in the Atlantic coast districts northward of Georgia. In Texas and from the upper lake region westward to the north Pacific coast and elsewhere there was more than the usual sunshine."

Mount Sterling, Ky.—Emil Fredrich, proprietor of the Model Greenhouse, says: "The trade this year has exceeded any previous season, in spite of the unfavorable weather. I more and more believe that if florists would educate the people in the use of fine specimen plants, trade could be increased by at least two hundred per cent. In my house of 9,000 feet, at least two-thirds of my stock consists of large specimen plants, and at this writing, May 20, I have not a plant left except 200 geraniums which are not in bloom. While the cut flower trade has been rather dull for some months past, probably on account of the tobacco agitation in this section of Kentucky, the plant trade has well balanced the difference and the season generally has been satisfactory."

CHICAGO.

The Great Central Market.

The market continued overstocked from the beginning to the end of last week. There was a considerable volume of business, but receipts were so exceedingly heavy that it was impossible to dispose of all the stock, even by permitting the buyer to make the price on quantities. Indeed, conditions became such that for the poorer stock there was no bottom. The select roses and carnations brought fair values, but the effect of the weather had been so bad that a large part of the receipts were of such poor quality that no first-class store could use them. One Greek took delight in going about the market exhibiting a ticket for carnations counted out to him at 2 cents per bunch. Such sales are a great mistake. Carnations which are worth no more than 2 cents per bunch should go into the waste barrel. Stock of that quality should never be permitted to reach the public.

In spite of the extremely low prices, the total sales last week footed up a goodly sum. This week starts off with conditions not much improved as regards supply or quality of stock, but with a considerable increase in out-of-town demand and a big volume of business booked for Decoration day shipment. It was interesting to note that Decoration day stock was ordered shipped as early as Tuesday. What it will be like by the time it is wanted for use, on Saturday, may readily be imagined. The best of stock at present will not stand so long. The heaviest shipping is booked for Thursday, May 28, and it is certain that the supply of good stock will not meet the demand; prices on the best grade will be held firmly. The trouble is that there is comparatively little which can be called good. The only redeeming feature is that Memorial day does not call for high class stock, like Christmas. There have been three weeks of decidedly unfavorable weather. Both roses and carnations are soft and off-colored and there would be sure to be much complaint from buyers except for the fact that they doubtless will realize that the wholesaler cannot send crisp, firm stock when nature wills it otherwise.

Orders for carnations are specially heavy and there may be difficulty in meeting all requirements. Of roses there promise to be enough to fill all orders, although small buds, poor color and soft stock are the rule with everyone. The receipts of peonies have increased materially, but here, too, a large part of the supply is of poor quality. Thousands of dozens of open flowers are received daily and have been selling at low prices, while first-class, tight peonies in pink and white have been commanding $1 per dozen.

There are large quantities of miscellaneous flowers in the market, such as valley, irises, gladioli, daisies, sweet peas, cape jasmines, tulips, Easter lilies and callas. And if anyone finds himself running short of flowers for either Saturday or Sunday, he can be sure of receiving something if he adds either of the code words "Dancing" or "Flamingo" to his telegram.

Tuesday, May 26, the temperature was 82 degrees in the shade.

Decoration Day

This holiday of ALL is the one we always advise that you cannot over-buy. Each year we find that every flower obtainable is used. Look up your last year's sales and prepare on a basis of at least 25 per cent more, and if you have had a good season, go stronger than that. You won't be sorry, for we repeat above, all flowers sell for Decoration Day. We look for flowers enough for all, and a little lower than last year. In our best judgment the following prices will prevail:

| | Per doz. |
| AMERICAN BEAUTY— | |
| Stems 30 to 40 inches | $3.00 to $4.00 |

Peonies.

The Peterson Nursery reports that its peonies will be in full bloom, at the present rate of progress, about June 8. The season is early, certain irises coming in this year exactly two weeks earlier than last season. The peonies will bear the usual crop of bloom, no damage having been done by the weather, as was the case with the southern crop. Last year Mr. Peterson sold all the peonies he cut to Leopold Koropp. He has not determined what disposition he will make of them this season.

Klehm's Nursery, at Arlington Heights, says that while some Old Red will be cut for Memorial day, it will be June 5 before the general cut will be on, after which it is expected there will be plenty of peonies for all who want them.

Various Notes.

W. L. Palinsky says that the wholesale business in bedding stock is heavier than it was last year. There was little doing after May 15, but since then he has had all that he could handle, with three teams for delivery.

C. H. Fisk reports trade a little quiet on the west side, but sufficient funeral work to keep things going.

The E. F. Winterson Co. is receiving consignments of Lilium speciosum rubrum from an eastern house. The leading retailers are willing to pay a fair price for them because they are not commonly seen in this market until the outdoor crop is ready.

Kennicott Bros. Co. is already receiving asters—but they are grown under glass, of course.

Vaughan & Sperry are putting in a new ice-box in their corner of the Flower Growers' market. They believe that business is soon going ahead again at as good a rate as ever, and they propose considerably increasing their facilities this summer.

L. Baumann & Co. say that the calls for moss wreaths, ruscus wreaths, etc., for Decoration day have been much heavier than they were last year.

Frank Beu has just completed his three new houses, the largest addition he ever has put up in one year. It practically doubles his glass. He now has 40,000 feet. The new houses will shortly be planted in chrysanthemums, giving bench space for about 40,000 plants.

Carl N. Thomas arrived from Pennsylvania May 25 to participate in the Memorial day activities of the A. L. Randall Co.

Probably few in the market appreciate the quantity of sweet peas H. C. Blewitt, at Des Plaines, has grown this year. He had eleven benches, 5x75 feet, devoted to this flower, using Zvolanek's seed, and has had excellent results. The crop is now about at an end. After this week the plants will be thrown out and the space devoted to a fall crop of mums.

Louis C. Schelte, who formerly rented his greenhouses at Park Ridge to Edward Meuret, has recently taken them over again. Mr. Meuret is building a range for himself.

George C. Baker, of Des Moines, was in town last week. He has charge of the cut flower department of the Iowa Seed Co., which is conducted under the name of the Iowa Floral Co., and was looking over retail stores for ideas to be employed in improving their store this summer.

May 19 the Schiller Floral Co. was granted a city building permit for the erection of a two-story store and flat at 904-6 West Madison street.

The factory of the J. C. Wintermeyer Co., which supplies E. H. Hunt and other wholesalers with cut flower boxes, was burned out May 21. Mr. Wintermeyer, who has many personal friends among the wholesalers, was quite seriously injured when he jumped from the office window. Five persons lost their lives in the fire.

The National Box Factory, which supplies shipping boxes to other wholesalers, was burned out Sunday, May 24.

E. C. Amling says that, in spite of the low prices, his sales May 23 were fifteen per cent greater than for the same Saturday a year ago, showing what an immense amount of stock is being handled this year.

Bassett & Washburn are cutting quite heavily in the houses of roses grown for summer bloom.

E. H. Hunt is receiving large quantities of peonies from central Illinois. If they were cut and bunched right they would be first-class property, but many bunches are too open.

Scheiden & Schoos are beginning the rebuilding of benches at their establishment at Evanston. They say stock in the field has secured a good start.

Joseph Foerster says he thinks that if supplies were no greater than a year ago demand would be seen to be equally strong.

Poehlmann Bros. Co. is shipping its stock from the greenhouses in large corrugated pasteboard boxes and thereby saving several dollars a day in express charges. The Benthey-Coatsworth Co. has for a long time shipped stock from New Castle in corrugated pasteboard boxes.

Peter Reinberg has not yet begun the new houses to be erected adjoining the range put up last year on "the farm." He is doing a large amount of rebuilding of benches at the home plant, using pecky cypress.

C. W. McKellar keeps close tab on the engagement announcements and says the June crop of weddings will be up to the best previous records. It affects the orchid market.

J. J. Kruchten says he is well pleased with the Decoration day prospects.

The George Wittbold Co. reports being rushed to the limit and says the call for window-boxes, bedding out, etc., is fully up to any previous year. Already they are cleaned out of geraniums in flower and are at their wits' ends to find material to satisfy those customers who insist a window-box must make its best showing the day it is filled.

Robert Groves, the Adams, Mass., fern man, is in Chicago for a few days, but says he has no more stock to offer.

H. R. Hughes has put in another elaborate window decoration for Memorial day and issued an advertising folder for distribution on the west side. There can be no question that such advertising as Hughes is doing pays handsomely.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

The trade here saw no improvement as to business last week and everyone is having his troubles. The wholesaler complains of low prices, slow demand and large consignments of all kinds of stock. It was a pity to see so many good carnations and roses go to waste as was the case last week. This week the wholesalers expect more trade, as Decoration day, Saturday, should clean up the surplus stock. The retailers say there is really nothing much going on except for funerals, a few small weddings and dinners. Stock is selling so cheaply that a good order nowadays brings a good profit. The plantsmen are complaining of too much rain, which is greatly interfering with their work, as the time is now here when plants should be out.

The heavy wind and rain storm of Sunday, May 24, did a great deal of damage to fine trees and shrubbery about the city and parks.

Various Notes.

We had with us last week our old friend, Arnold Ringier, representing the W. W. Barnard Co., Chicago. Mr. Ringier has been west and reports a good run of business.

The Mullanphy Florist Co., on Grand avenue, reports having the order to furnish the bouquets and decorations for the high school and Yeatman school graduating classes. This store has also been quite busy of late with funeral work.

Henry Ostertag furnished 600 American Beauties at the opening of the new Third National Bank at Broadway and Olive streets. The Bentzen Floral Co., Fred C. Weber, C. Young & Sons Co., and the Riessen Floral Co. had large designs to make. In fact, nearly everyone in the trade had a design or a large bunch to make for this opening.

Fred Plant, of the Plant Seed Co., visited Chicago recently to attend the meeting of the Western Seedsmen's Association. Mr. Plant was much pleased with his visit, as his time while there was made enjoyable. A large delegation of seedsmen from here will attend the meeting of the American Seed Trade Association at Detroit, June 23 to 25.

A large shipment of Japanese iris from the Yokohama Nursery Co. was refused by a consignee here. The shipment was placed in the hands of the St. Louis Seed Co. for disposal.

The sad news of the death of our friend, William Scott, was a great shock in the trade here. The first news came through the Review and all are with me in expressing our deepest sympathy with the bereaved family.

Charlie Kuehn, Henry Berning, Billy Smith and George Angermueller, the four bosses at the wholesale houses, are expected to take part in the ball game between the wholesale and retail teams at the florists' picnic given by the St. Louis Florists' Club for members and friends in July.

Robert J. Windler is reported sick at one of the hospitals in the southern part of the city, having had an operation performed. From reports of friends who visit him, he will be out in a week or ten days. In the meantime Rose Windler is managing the store.

State of Trade.

Trade has been fairly good in the cut flower line the last two weeks, with stock not overplentiful, except roses, which have been of good quality and in rather heavy crop. Carnations have been scarce and on several occasions were at a premium. Trade has been heavy in the plant line, as the weather has opened up and everybody wants work done right away. Peonies have been coming in heavily and no doubt there will be a good supply for Decoration day. Sweet peas are fine and find a ready sale. The first outdoor peas were cut here, by C. P. Torrey, May 18, and were extra fine.

Various Notes.

The carnival held last week for the benefit of the Play Ground Association was a great success. The Fifth Avenue Floral Co. and the Livingston Seed Co. made creditable displays.

Everybody is looking forward to a heavy trade for Decoration day.

The Florists' Club is getting busy now for the annual picnic, which will be held at Buckeye lake. The exact date has not been decided on, but no doubt it will be shortly after July 4.

The Munk Floral Co. is cutting some fine sweet peas and they find a ready sale.

The Fifth Avenue Floral Co. had a large funeral at Plain City, O., and had to send a man along with the work to take charge of it.

Sherman Stephens reports heavy business in cemetery work.

C. A. Roth reports business rushing.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

This should be the last week of depression for a while, for now comes Decoration day and then the largest crop of June weddings ever harvested in this vicinity. Society has its share of them, with elaborate decorations, which will furnish velvet for the leading retail florists, and June is the month of weddings for all up-to-date families and brides, and so no retailer will miss his share. Decoration day promises more general observance than ever before. Sunday was Memorial Sunday in Brooklyn and many thousands marched to the cemeteries to decorate the nation's soldiers', sailors' and marines' graves of all the wars. Many battalions of the Grand Army took part, and with them the cadets and church cadet organizations. An enormous crowd witnessed the ceremony.

The cut flower market will be completely depleted the last of the week, in anticipation of the observance, and doubtless prices will advance considerably before Saturday. There is no encouraging change yet to report from last week's low level and there is still enough of everything, and to spare. Roses of all kinds are abundant. Carnations continue their record-breaking supply, and there is no shortage in any variety of flower the public demand requires. Peonies are now down to $2 to $3 per hundred and great quantities have been coming from the south daily. The summer temperature has doubtless come to stay. Sunday recorded 80 degrees and over in the shade.

Various Notes.

Next month comes the rose show in Bronx park and if Secretary Hammond will use his influence and act upon Dr. Britton's suggestion, so that the crowds who visit the parks on Saturday and Sunday can see the exhibition, there will be such a flower show as this city has never known. No other days in the week will develop more than the average interest and an opportunity for educational effect will be lost of far-reaching importance, if the society ignore this practical suggestion.

Roselle, N. J., May 22, 1908.

The New York Florists' Club holds its monthly meeting Monday, June 8. Events are crowding upon the club that will keep it busy until September. Wednesday of this week is ladies' night, with the promise of a record crowd; every Friday evening, bowling; rose night at the next meeting, with interesting exhibits; the outing July 1, for the success of which arrangements are already complete, and then the convention in August, with its special train and record-breaking New York delegation. Surely a busy summer for the club. Chairman Rickards, the man of mystery, has an undivulged program and menu that will add to his popularity at the ladies' night, Wednesday, May 27.

John Young and the other members of the bereaved family have the universal sympathy of all in the loss of his mother last week. Many beautiful floral tokens evidenced the love and veneration in which Mrs. Young was held by all who knew her.

June 13 Charles L. Allen, of Queens, known and esteemed by every florist in the land, will celebrate his eightieth birthday. A member of the 100-year Club and an exponent of right living all his life, he bids fair to reach the century with health and faculties unimpaired, and sincere congratulations from every part of the United States and Canada will greet him as he records another mile-stone in his happy journey.

John F. Marsden, of Far Rockaway, had a narrow escape last Friday in an auto accident, when in his own machine he collided with that of one of the banking firm of Kuhn, Loeb & Co. Both cars were wrecked and both men thrown twenty feet and rendered unconscious, but neither was seriously injured.

The importers are still busy. Nearly every one is bringing in hundreds of laurel trees in tubs by every steamer. There are no signs of depression in the seed and nursery departments of the trade.

After his first and enjoyable trip to Europe, H. Suzuki is again in New York and will shortly return to Japan. He is a gentleman of most thorough horticultural training and knowledge and a general favorite with all who have made his acquaintance.

ests and makes 55 West Twenty-sixth street his headquarters as usual.

The death of William Scott came as a shock to many, though not unexpected. No man was more generally loved and esteemed among the horticulturists of this community. To many he was a personal friend. One of his oldest associates was John Birnie, who was a friend of nearly half a century. No one will be more regretfully missed at the August convention.

At the wedding of Samuel Jacobs last week, a brother of Abraham, of J. K. Allen's staff, and Benjamin, of George Saltford's, George J. Allen and wife were among the guests, and as is usual at the weddings of florists the decorations were elaborate.

If rumor speaks truly, there are a couple of old bachelors on Twenty-eighth street, among the wholesale florists, who will take advantage of the June mesmeric influence and join the great majority. It is high time in both cases.

There is a plan on foot to close all the wholesale stores at noon during July and August.

The auctions still draw crowded houses, all of them, and the only problem seems to be to get enough stock to offer. There is apparently a scarcity of good bedding stock and the demand has far exceeded all other seasons. Fruit trees, vines, small fruits, everything for the garden has sold well. Often the prices secured have been much in advance of regular wholesale quotations, thanks to the ambitious suburbanite.

The Johnson Heating Co. is putting in two of its boilers at John N. May's, Summit, N. Y. The company has just finished changing the system from water to steam at A. J. Guttman's plant at Summit and at Rassbach & Son's, Bloomfield, N. J.

Bowling.

New blood has been infused into the club and the average is rising. The tide is rather late, however, to reach high water mark of 155 before the contest for the Traendly transportation closes, so the president will not suffer a heavy draft on his resources for sporting purposes. The weekly contest takes place on Thumm's alleys, Broadway and Thirty-first street, every Friday evening. All club members are invited to be present. The first two games on the score count in the convention contest. Following is the record made May 22:

J. AUSTIN SHAW.

Boyd Putnam, leading man this season for the Lillian Russell company, died at the home of his brother-in-law, Lyman Craw, secretary of the Lord & Burnham Co., at Irvington, N. Y., from Bright's disease. He was a son of Judge Putnam, of Grand Rapids, Mich., and a descendant of Gen. Israel Putnam of revolutionary fame.

Surrogate Ketcham handed down a decision May 20 in the matter of the accounting in the estate of James Weir, Jr., the well-known Brooklyn florist, in which he upholds the action of the executors, the widow, Margaret A. Weir, and James B. Weir, in their management of the estate since the death of the senior member of the firm. By the terms of the will it was provided that the son and only partner of the deceased could, if he wished, purchase the business for a specified price. After Mr. Weir's death the business was for a time carried on by the surviving member under the co-partnership agreement, and the widow received certain profits. More recently the surviving partner purchased the interest of the deceased by an agreement with all the parties in interest.

TO THE TRADE

Less than four years ago I built two small greenhouses, as a venture into the florists' world. My twelve greenhouses, located at my home in New Cumberland, Pa., the two stores in Harrisburg, Pa., one at 35 North Second St., the other at 1108 Market St., and the store at 159 South St., Steelton, Pa., are proof to me that the key to success is carefully looking after the wants of one's patrons, by giving both wholesaler and retailer only the best that can be grown and never allowing anyone to be dissatisfied.

Having recently added seed departments to each of my stores, I am now in shape to take care of my trade in the most satisfactory manner and promise to give the same careful attention to all in the future as in the past.

With thanks for past patronage, I am, for pleasure and profit,

Very truly yours,

The Market.

The near approach of Memorial day has now given a little fillip to business. It is true there is not much advance in prices, but the market is better cleaned up and growers are quite optimistic over sales to be made later in the week. Roses are still abundant, with no advance in price except for the best colored varieties. As some growers are already emptying their houses, owing to unprofitable prices, there promises soon to be a shortening up of these. Carnations are in heavy crop and, in spite of the recent hot weather, the quality holds remarkably good. Red varieties are in best request. Whites are always the slowest sale for Memorial day. There is a good supply of sweet peas, but the quality is rapidly deteriorating.

Of lilies there promises to be a full supply, also of such useful flowers as double feverfews, marguerites, stocks, candytuft, spiræa, gladioli and Spanish iris. Of Dutch bulbous stock there will be a smaller supply than had been anticipated, owing to the hot weather.

There is an active call for bedding plants of all kinds, also for hydrangeas, Baby Rambler roses and other stock suitable for planting outdoors.

At the Arnold Arboretum.

The lilacs at the Arnold arboretum were at their best May 24, the hot weather having sent them along rapidly. The flowering season for all shrubs is fully two weeks earlier than in 1907, lilacs last year being only in bud for Memorial day. The collection here comprises about 150 varieties, many of these being Lemoine's latest introductions. All are blooming with unusual freedom this year and make a glorious showing at present. Specially noteworthy were the following varieties: In singles, Philemon, splendid dark purplish red; Souvenir de Ludwig Spæth, similar to foregoing; Goliath, soft pink, immense panicles; rubra trianoniana, a little lighter than Philemon; F. B. Hayes, soft pink; President Massart, large purple panicles; Marie Legraye, still the finest single white; Princess Alexandra, a fine white, panicles rather smaller than Marie Legraye; Macrostachya, delicate lavender fading almost white, a magnificent sort; Congo, rich red, very fine; Comte de Kerchove, light pink; Furst Lichtenstein, rosy lilac, one of the best half dozen lilacs grown; Jacques Calot, delicate rose; Ville de Troyes, dark purple; Charles X., reddish purple.

Among many excellent doubles the following were noteworthy: Mme. Lemoine, superb white; Maxime Cornu, lavender; Condorcet, light pink; William Robinson, violet; Doyen Keteleer, very fine lavender; Belle de Nancy, satin rose; pyramidal, immense panicles, light blue; W. Linne, reddish lilac; Monument Carnot, lilac blue; Michael Buchner, lilac, very double; Comte de Kerchove, rose; President Grevy, grand panicles, a fine blue.

The cratægus in hundreds of varieties are now blooming with unusual freedom, as are the different forms of Cornus florida. The loniceras are always good and the Azalea Kæmpferi are showing up their brilliant trusses. Among the late crab-apples Bechtel's double-flowered variety, the finest of the whole family, is now at its best. The rhododendrons are already opening their flowers and will be a glorious sight in a few days.

Various Notes.

We are pleased to report Jackson Dawson as much improved from his recent illness.

The Boston park system is now unusually attractive. Never were the cornus so fine, the winter having spared all the flower buds. In Franklin park the Lonicera Marrowi are worthy of a special visit. The spiræas, halesias, kerrias, cratægus, lilacs and many other trees and shrubs are also adding their quota to the glorious display and no visitor to Boston should omit a drive around the extensive and well cared for system under Superintendent Pettigrew's charge.

John Walsh & Son, of Melrose Highlands, report business the last season as the best they have ever had, funeral and decorative orders being exceptionally numerous.

Daniel Iliffe is busy on heating contracts at the Plant estate, Groton, Conn., and reports trade as good.

Some of the places suggested for the next picnic of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club were Riverside park, Randolph park, Pine Banks park, Medford, and Bass Point, Nahant. The executive committee will soon decide on the location and it is planned to have the coming festival surpass all predecessors in interesting features.

May up to date has proved an unusually warm month and the mean temperature promises to be higher than for a number of years. A year ago we had few outdoor flowers at Memorial day. This season many of the varieties in common use will be on the wane.

Henry W. Robinson & Co. and Welch Bros. both anticipate a heavy Memorial day trade, advance orders being ahead of those in preceding years.

R. & J. Farquhar & Co. have a fine display of their new seedling lily, longiflorum x Philippense, at their store. Some of the plants carry as many as nine flowers; others which bloomed in December and January are again almost in bloom, showing the herbaceous nature of the cross.

The peony season here will be much

DAYTON, OHIO.

State of Trade.

The gradual increase in last week's business was more than noticeable to our Dayton florists, and we cannot help but feel the approach of Decoration day. Bedding plants of every description, naturally, sold far better than cut flowers. Our florists have been almost too busy to take time for bodily necessities. While the wholesalers were busy sending out their supply of plants, the retailers were busy planting out flower beds, filling urns, porch boxes, and doing everything in general to beautify the parks and lawns of our city.

During the last month a good many of our unemployed have taken to the florists' business and have been buying plants at wholesale and peddling them about the streets.

The crops on carnations are not any too plentiful and, from the present outlook, the demand for Decoration day will be greater than the supply. The present weather conditions, which are exceedingly warm and dry, have greatly reduced the size of the carnations. The Prosperity has lost its tinge of pink, but it makes a good white carnation. Lawson, pink and scarlet carnations are completely off crop and there will not be nearly enough to fill the orders booked up to the present time. Enchantress and white are holding their own as well as can be expected.

Brides, Bridesmaids and Richmonds also feel the effects of the hot weather and they, too, are commencing to get smaller. The outdoor roses, snowballs, etc., will be all past blooming by Decoration day. This, of course, will help the florists out to a certain extent.

We can only say that peonies will be fine. Most of them will have to be placed in cold storage in order to keep them for May 30.

The weather in the last two weeks has been all in favor of our florists and they have been able to get all of their outdoor planting done. The carnations, especially, are looking fine in the fields.

Boston ferns from the bench have sold well and are extensively used in urns, boxes and for porch decorations. Lily of the valley finds ready sale and is effective in funeral designing.

Various Notes.

H. H. Ritter is busy planting out and decorating the roof garden on the Algonquin hotel. No expense is being spared in these decorations, and the garden promises to be a most beautiful resort.

The Miami Floral Co. has about 50,000 carnations in the field and 40,000 in pots.

C. M. Schaefer, who has his stand in the Arcade, says business is fine in every respect.

Mr. Pruner, of E. H. Hunt's supply house, and Mr. Lempke, of the W. W. Barnard Co., who have been calling on the florists, spent Sunday, May 17, at the home of George Bartholomew.

George Bird, of Sidney, O., and Mr. Wenneman, representing the Peters & Reed Pottery Co., of South Zanesville, O., were visitors last week. R. A. B.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Rising Eastern Market.

The cut flower market has been quiet since last report. The weather conditions changed on Saturday afternoon, bright, hot days succeeding the long, cool, cloudy spell. The effect on cut flowers is marked, the quantity being largely increased, the quality decidedly lowered. Oddly enough, Beauties have suffered more than tea roses, the average quality of the Beauties being lower in standard than that of the Brides and Maids. There are still, however, some excellent Beauties to be had, several houses showing stock that has been little impaired as yet by the heat. Killarney is holding up well, being easily the best pink rose in the market today, its chief drawback being the exceedingly short stems seen on most of the flowers. Richmond is deteriorating with most growers. Liberty is scarce.

Carnations have suffered more than roses, the fancy stock being far from plentiful. Sweet peas, indoor grown, are bad, very bad. The arrival of the scouts, so to speak (they cannot be called the advance guard) of the outdoor sweet peas, is welcomed with joy.

Peonies, of superb quality, are increasing in numbers, a moderate supply of southern stock being quite outshown by the home-grown product. All the colors can now be had, and finer stock would be hard to imagine. So far the supply has not been ahead of the demand. Any day may cause a change in the situation.

Spanish iris has been succeeded by the ordinary flags, but they do not fill the void. Dagger ferns are plentiful, with prices irregular. Some of the longest strings of asparagus ever seen in this market are meeting with ready demand. Common snowballs have been succeeded by the Japanese variety. Indications point to heavy shipping to the battle towns of this state May 28.

A Flurry on the Street.

Some time ago the street became aware that John Burton, recognized as one of our ablest and most far-seeing growers, had given it as his opinion that the American Beauty rose would soon go on the back track, for a time at least.

He advanced in support of this opinion the fact that the best retail shop had been unable to get the Beauties it required during midwinter, and therefore had gotten along without them, and would continue to do so during the busy season. This statement of Mr. Burton was recalled a few days ago when the street heard that the Joseph Heacock Co., recognized as one of our largest Beauty growers, had decided to discard American Beauties next season. This means that ten houses less of Beauties will be grown for this market next season. When asked regarding the truth of this rumor, Mr. Heacock stated that he had decided to replace Beauty with other roses, chiefly Killarney, and with his seedling carnation, No. 100. The reason assigned is the immense amount of labor required in growing and tying the Beauty; too much labor, it is believed, to make it profitable as of yore, in face of the new varieties coming to the front.

A Chat With Mr. Pennock.

J. Liddon Pennock, member of the firm of Pennock Bros. and noted for his original combinations with plants and flowers, discussed the present tendencies of the so-called progressive florists toward department store methods in disposing of their stock. Mr. Pennock deprecated returning to mixed boxes of cut flowers at a set price, believing that such boxes are apt to be unprofitable to the florist and unsatisfactory to the customer, who can rarely arrange the mixtures effectively in one vase, owing to the variety of color and different lengths of stem so frequently put up. Mr. Pennock believes that, speaking generally, the most satisfactory purchases of loose flowers are those sold by the dozen of a single or possibly two varieties, where color harmonizes and where there can be no possible discussion as to whether the boxes contain the specified number of assorted blooms. In short, Mr. Pennock believes that the best class of flower lovers and flower buyers cannot be reached through this method by the best shops. It is far more satisfactory, as well as better business, to aim to elevate the public taste by original and harmonizing combination or by exceptionally choice blooms of a single variety, for which a fair price should be charged.

Baby Forget-me-nots.

Robert Kift had a winning novelty on his counter this week in the shape of baby forget-me-nots. They were tiny plantlets in bloom in something like a ½-inch pot. Each one, as William Crawford proudly stated, had roots on it, though it seemed a mystery how so tiny a pot could have space for any roots in its interior. Mr. Kift turned his attention to the pans of forget-me-nots purchased for his store. These pans contained little seedlings, weaker and smaller than the rest, but each with its tiny rootlet and flower. When carefully subtracted from the mass and as carefully potted in the tiny potlets formerly used for cacti, they presented a unique and charming appearance. I should like to tell you just how many ducats Mr. Kift obtained for each of these plant curiosities, but it hardly seems fair to him.

Various Notes.

Arthur A. Niessen, of the Leo Niessen Co., will speak before the Florists' Club on Tuesday evening, June 2, at 8 o'clock, on "Coöperation Between the Retailer and Wholesaler in Time of Overproduction."

Edward J. Fancourt, secretary of the S. S. Pennock-Meehan Co., has just returned from a business trip through New York and New England. Mr. Fancourt always has something interesting to tell of the wonderful progress floriculture is making in different sections of this country.

H. Bayersdorfer & Co. have received fresh shipments of choice supplies on the steamers Pollanza and Manitou.

The water-soaked condition of a vast majority of the indoor sweet peas suggests that if they are not ready to throw out, a little fire heat, combined with plenty of air on damp nights, might be tried with advantage.

Alphonse Pericat, of Collingdale, Pa., is sending some superb Cattleya Mossiæ to the S. S. Pennock-Meehan Co.

William J. Muth reports that the Philadelphia Cut Flower Co. is receiving sweet peas of excellent quality, outdoor grown, in all the leading colors.

B. Eschner, of M. Rice & Co., returned last week from the western part of the state. Mr. Eschner always has a good trip. It is simply a question of whether it is enthusiastically good, or quietly good.

Herbert Baker has been producing some excellent roses for Casper & George L. Pennock, Lansdowne.

VIOLETS.

Plants for Stock.

The house and soil in readiness, it becomes important to secure first-class stock. Before taking up this question it may be well to briefly mention the fact, already well known to most of you, namely, that there are comparatively few varieties of the violet. The Marie Louise is the standard double; the Lady Hume Campbell is second, with strains of each of these which have been locally developed. These cover the category of the double sorts. Of the singles, there are quite a number, but it is not necessary to take up the variety question at this time, as space would forbid.

In the securing of stock it is highly important that attention be given to the origin of the same. We do not advocate the use of divided crowns. Plants from stock of this kind are not as a rule as vigorous or as thrifty as cuttings rooted in sand. Sand rooted cuttings, therefore, we consider most desirable for propagation purposes. When one has the work already established and wishes to develop his own stock, cuttings should be made from the middle of February until the latter part of March.

Selection of Cuttings.

It is of fundamental importance to give careful attention to the selection of cuttings. We have shown that the average yield of the violet plant can be materially increased by proper selection. Four years' selection of the plants increased our average yield from about fifty flowers per plant to more than ninety. This selection work was done by marking in the fall the most vigorous plants, and keeping a record of the blooms from each throughout the season. By the time the propagating season comes around it can be determined which of the plants marked are giving the most flowers and the best ones. Cuttings from these plants would propagate the valuable characteristics.

In a talk of this kind it is, of course, impracticable to give the many little details which are of the greatest importance in laying the foundation for the successful production of the crop. The manner of putting in the cuttings, the care to be exercised in keeping them from wilting, the prevention of insect attack, especially red spider—all these things are of the highest importance in getting a foundation stock which will produce the flowers the coming season.

It takes considerable time for the violet cutting to root, and for this reason it is more difficult to get good, healthy stock than it is with the rose and carnation. All these matters the grower will have to learn by experience.

Rooting the Cuttings.

Our usual practice is to root the cuttings in benches, using bank sand if it is practicable to procure it. There is a disease of the violet, which we will refer to later and which has its inception usually in the cutting bench, through the medium, I think, of improperly washed sand. Bank sand is usually free from the fungus carrying the disease, hence the recommendation for its use.

After the cuttings are rooted they are transferred to small flats, each holding 100 plants. The flats are about two and a half inches deep and are filled with prepared soil which is well sifted. The plants may stand in these flats until they are ready to be set in the beds, any time between May 20 and June 20. After the plants are put out it is then only necessary to see that they are carefully watered and looked after, the ground kept free from weeds and constantly cultivated. Growth begins at once and is rapid, especially if the plants are under glass and are kept fairly well shaded.

The violet, like other crops under glass, has its troubles; in fact, it is generally believed that the violet has more than its share of difficulties of this kind. Taking up the diseases in the order of their importance, we will call attention to one which is familiar to every florist who has attempted to grow the crop, namely, the so-called spot.

The Spot Disease.

The spot disease is no longer a mystery, as it has been proved to be due to a fungus, the spores or reproductive bodies of which are nearly always to be found in the air of violet houses, only waiting the proper condition of the plant to infect the foliage. There is little to be feared from spot if proper precautions are taken to keep the plants in health. Without entering into a detailed description of the life history and general work of the fungus, the whole matter of prevention has already been summed up by me, and I may be pardoned for repeating it here, as follows: "Keep the plants at all times in a healthy growing condition; rigidly destroy all diseased parts of the plants; never apply water to the leaves in such a way that they can not dry in from four to five hours; keep the leaves free from dew, and avoid fumigation with tobacco, or if tobacco is used, make the smoke as light as possible."

The question of keeping the leaves of the plant dry at certain seasons is of the highest importance. From the middle of August until from the first to the middle of October is the critical time for spot. This is when the crowns are growing rapidly, and the foliage is thick. Syringing should always be done at this season of the year on days when it is certain the leaves will dry off before night. Heavy fumigation with tobacco is absolutely certain to produce spot. It produces the disease by so weakening the plant that the fungus has an opportunity to invade the tissues.

Pres., George S. Green, Chicago; First Vice-pres., M. H. Duryea, New York; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland. Twenty-sixth annual convention at Hotel Pontchartrain, Detroit, Mich., June 23 to 25, 1908.

THE McKay Seed Company is a new concern at Jackson, Miss.

HEAVY rains in the southwest have made some call for seeds for replanting.

VISITED CHICAGO: Geo. C. Baker, advertising manager of the Iowa Seed Co., Des Moines.

A. H. GOODWIN, of the W. W. Barnard Co., Chicago, started May 26 for Asheville, N. C.

TIMOTHY seed offerings at Chicago are light. September sold at $4 May 26, and country lots were quoted $3 to $4.10.

W. W. BARNARD CO., Chicago, says that the season's business has been the largest ever done, in practically every line of its diversified interests.

BUYERS of Pacific coast products will find it worth while to keep watch of the Pacific Coast Department, which is a regular feature of the REVIEW.

CUCUMBER seed of the pickling varieties is in demand, as the stock of pickles on hand is said to be the lightest in a long time and a large pack this year is expected.

WEATHER conditions make for a late planting season in the corn canning districts and canners are stiffening on the price of the pack because of the chance of a reduced yield.

IT is stated that the contract for putting up the government seeds for 1909 will be awarded in a few days. It is stated that the Brown Bag Filling Machine Co. is the lowest bidder.

THE Iowa Seed Dealers' Association, which has nearly a score of members and of which Charles N. Page is president, will hold its second annual meeting at the Hotel Chamberlin, Des Moines, June 9.

AT Des Moines, Ia., a few days ago F. C. Graves was convicted of the fraudulent use of the mails in the conduct of his seed business and was sentenced to fifteen months' imprisonment, with a fine of $500.

ONE of the largest jobbers of Dutch bulbs and Easter lily bulbs says that in the big cities the growers are cutting orders to half or even one-third the quantity bought last year, but that those who force bulbs only for their own local retail trade, or for wholesaling in the smaller cities, are ordering just as many bulbs as last year.

THE season of 1908 is now near an end and in general everyone is satisfied with results. While business has been less in some lines, it has increased in others and averages well with practically all houses. The mail trade was good, particularly with western houses. In practically all lines stocks are well cleaned up. The shortages have not been felt as acutely as some wholesalers, upon whom the demand centered, thought they would, but stocks are in such a condition that it is to be hoped the 1908 crop will be a good one.

CONDITIONS IN CALIFORNIA.

C. C. Morse & Co., San Francisco, under date of May 20, speak as follows of conditions in the Santa Clara valley:

"Notwithstanding a very dry spring, lettuce and onion still promise well, but sweet peas are looking poorly and it seems to be an off year for them.

"Other crops are generally fair and altogether the prospects are better than one would expect with a very unfavorable season. However, there is still time for onion blight and disasters generally."

A. J. Pieters, of the Pieters Seed Co., Hollister, Cal., said May 23:

"On the whole the yield will not be heavy. There will probably be no great surpluses to bother the trade, and also there will be few total failures. The conditions in the early part of the season were favorable and all the early plantings make a good stand. The late planted stuff, especially lettuce, did not

MICHIGAN has had a week of good weather.

A NUMBER of western seed houses report that while the mail catalogue trade has been larger than usual, the wholesale business was less than last year. This is accounted for by the fact that the financial excitement was at its height at the time the wholesale orders are usually taken from country general stores, and it is suggested that the falling off in one department may have been of just that much assistance in the other.

make a good stand and there are many vacant places in the rows. Then came the dry weather of March and April, relieved by only one good shower in May, and the crops are all suffering in consequence. At the present time onions appear to be in good condition, with scarcely a trace of disease. Where the ground is not too dry the crop should be good and, fortunately, the onions are mostly on the lower lands. It must be remembered, though, that the acreage is very short, so that a good stand and good prospect on the acreage in does not mean a big crop.

"The good yield that seems likely on what we have will prevent a famine if it does not materially relieve the shortage at present existing in some lines.

"Radish is very good where the seed was put in early, but the writer has seen some fields that do not look at all promising, and since these fields were large ones he believes that the average yield of radish will not go above seventy-five per cent. The crops of one grower may be good, while those of another may produce less than twenty-five per cent, all depending on whether the seed was put in early or late.

"Carrots are uneven in appearance, the same as radish. Some fields look at present as if there would be a heavy crop, while on other fields the stand and condition of the plants does not indicate more than twenty-five per cent of a yield. Danvers, so far as we are informed, is likely to be the most affected.

"Sweet peas will be short. How much growers will be short will depend largely on how heavily they are booked. We know of few failures so far, but the vines have not made the growth they should and the dry spring has told on them severely. The yield will be reduced accordingly and growers that have booked on the basis of a normal crop will not be able to deliver in full. We estimate the average shortage at not less than forty per cent.

"Lettuce is probably in the poorest condition of any crop this season. Lettuce is usually planted late and we depend on spring showers to help it along. This year we had no spring rains and the stand is correspondingly poor and the indications are that the yield will be light. There are some fine fields of lettuce that are beyond all ordinary danger of failure, but these fields were planted early and do not form a large part of the entire acreage. Taking all varieties into consideration, we estimate that deliveries of seventy-five per cent the coming fall may be considered good, while many will not go fifty per cent. Of course a good rain in June would help out, and we may get one, but do not look upon it as likely.

"Parsnips look well, as do parsley, spinach, mustard, leek, collards and endive. Salsify will be short, at least with some growers, but not enough to make a great deal of difference."

CONDITIONS IN FRANCE.

April 25 there was the heaviest fall of snow ever known so late in the season in the seed growing district of France, and at last reports this had been followed by cold, there being several degrees of frost for a few nights, so that anxiety was felt for cabbages, turnips, etc. Fortunately, the frosts did not last long enough to do much harm, and were followed by splendid weather; sunshine and now and then a little shower are pushing everything forward. A correspondent of the Horticultural Advertiser (English) has the following from a French correspondent May 5:

"Within a week or so we shall be able to set in our lettuces for seeds; plants are generally looking well. Radishes also will soon be transplanted. A short time ago we have been planting our beets, mangels and carrots under pretty good conditions; the worst is that plants generally were scarce and tiny, and therefore acreages planted are much smaller than usual. Of beets specially there is a big shortage, and even if the crop were to turn out a splendid one we should still be far short of the quantities we want here every year; and as nearly all stocks have been cleared out last season, no doubt high prices must be expected for next.

"Mangels have been largely planted again this year, but one fact must be noticed, that is, the scarcity of Long Red Mammoth Mangel. Last autumn the demand for it was so big that all stocks were soon cleared out at a good price. As there were but few plants to set for 1908 crop, no doubt this good old variety will fetch a good price again next season. Yellow varieties do not seem to have moved much in price. White varieties were a big crop last season, and prices dropped.

"Of carrots, plantations are not large, a good many plants having been destroyed by bad weather, worms, etc., during the winter. Then most of them were tiny and delicate, owing to their having been sown late last autumn. A small crop is expected.

"Onions have been largely set again this spring for 1908 crop, and should everything turn out well a big crop may be expected. Leeks are doing pretty well for the present, although the plants we set in for seeds were small. Parsnip not much planted; a short crop is expected. Parsley is doing well; winter radishes also."

SEEDSMEN'S PROGRAM.

Secretary C. E. Kendel is distributing the program for the twenty-sixth annual convention of the American Seed Trade Association, to be held at the Hotel Pontchartrain, Detroit, June 23 to 25. It is expected that the attendance will be the largest in the history of the organization. The program of essays and discussions is as follows:

"Theoretical and Practical Seed Breeding," by Dr. W. W. Tracy, U. S. Department of Agriculture.

"Farm Practice Investigations in Clover Seed Production," by C. B. Smith, U. S. Department of Agriculture.

"The Use of Forage Plants as Soil Improvers." In the South, by Henry W. Wood, of T. W. Wood & Sons, Richmond, Va. In the North, by J. E. Northrup, of Northrup, King & Co., Minneapolis, Minn.

"What Effect Does a Commercial Depression Have on the Garden Seed Business?" by E. C. Dungan, of William Henry Maule, Philadelphia, Pa.

"Practical Education in Horticulture," by Dr. A. C. True, U. S. Department of Agriculture.

"The Effect of Low Prices on the Production of High-Grade Stocks," by C. N. Keeney, of N. B. Keeney & Sons, Le Roy, N. Y.

"Fire Insurance," by Albert McCullough, of J. M. McCullough's Sons Co., Cincinnati, O.

Disclaimer Discussion, in executive session, led by Leonard H. Vaughan, of Vaughan's Seed Store, Chicago, and S. F. Willard, of Comstock, Ferre & Co., Wethersfield, Conn.

"The American Trade-Mark Law and Its Importance to Seed Growers and Merchants," by Edward T. Fenwick, of Mason, Fenwick & Lawrence, Washington, D. C.

In a circular to members Secretary Kendel says:

"The topics that will be discussed at the convention at Detroit this year are of interest to all seedsmen.

"There will be interesting reports from committees in regard to seed legislation, both state and national.

"Thousands of people annually pass through Detroit that do not know they have the right to a ten days' stop-over on their tickets without extra charge. This applies to all tickets to or from any point in the United States or Canada, provided same is within the final limit of said ticket. Passengers desiring this privilege will make application for same to conductor or train auditor, and latter will endorse coupon "Off at Detroit," date and sign same, and advise passenger that immediately upon arrival at Detroit the ticket must be deposited with ticket agent at the depot arrived at. The latter will furnish a receipt for ticket.

"There will probably be very low rates offered to the convention of the National Education Association at Cleveland, so if any members wish to attend the latter they can use the above stop-over privileges to good advantage.

"The management of the Hotel Pontchartrain promise to make us comfortable and would like to hear in advance from as many as intend to engage rooms.

"The rates offered are $2 each for two in a room or $2.50 single, and upwards, without meals. Other hotels are near and eating houses numerous."

CUTWORMS

Corn, Grain, Potatoes, Roots, Cotton, Vegetables and Flowers suffer enormous damage from Cutworms, Eelworms, Ants, Slugs and all kinds of Bugs in the soil. Maybe you don't see them, but you pay for them—quit doing so and use Vaporite.

Vaporite is the new, marvelous English product—a non-poisonous powder. Just sprinkle it onto the soil and plow or dig in as directed before planting or sowing. It acts quickly—the insects are destroyed in a few days, so that your ground is free and fertile.

Vaporite is revolutionizing many branches of Agriculture.

THE CANNING CENTER.

Last year Maryland canned more than two-fifths of all the tomatoes put up in the United States. The total pack of the country amounted to 12,920,000 cases of two dozen cans per case. Of that amount Maryland alone packed 5,294,-253 cases.

By far the greater portion of the tomatoes canned in Maryland are canned in Baltimore. The output of the county canneries is large, but it does not compare with the output of the city's packing houses.

Not only this, but Baltimore is the leading city in the United States in the production of canned goods generally. Those who are in a position to know say that it is doubtful if the entire output of all the canneries in the state of California equals that of this city. The monetary value of all the vegetables, fruits and oysters canned in this city annually amounts to over $30,000,000. At a conservative estimate the tomato pack alone was easily worth $7,000,000.

As may be imagined from what has been said, the canneries turn out more

GOOD YEAR IN IOWA.

Henry Field, president of the Henry Field Seed Co., Shenandoah, Ia., says:

"We have had a very prosperous season, showing about fifty-eight per cent increase in business over last year, the increase over last year becoming more and more noticeable as the season advanced. At the start of the season we showed about twenty per cent gain over last year; March showed about forty-eight per cent gain, and April and May were almost double last year. We do a catalog business exclusively, direct to the planter, and issue 125,000 catalogs; will make it 150,000 next winter. We handle all kinds of seeds and bulbs, but of course seed corn is our strongest line, as we are in the heart of the famous Shenandoah seed corn district."

DUTCH BULB GROWERS' SOCIETY.

The following awards were given by the narcissus and mixed bulbs committees at the meeting of April 22: First-class certificates to: Narcissus General Baden Powell, a deep yellow trumpet daffodil; Narcissus Sulphur Beauty, with white perianth and clear sulphur trumpet; Narcissus bicolor Dick, with white perianth and yellow trumpet; Astilbe Queen Alexandra and Astilbe Peach Blossom, both of a handsome rosy pink color, good forcing, free flowering varieties.

Awards of merit were given to: Narcissus J. H. Krelage, a very early, free flowering trumpet daffodil, with light yellow perianth and pure yellow trumpet. Narcissus Mr. Van Noort, a cross between Emperor and Golden Spur, a large flower, with broad yellow trumpet and light yellow perianth. Narcissus Sir Henry Campbell Bannerman, with deep yellow trumpet and yellow perianth with rather pointed petals; Narcissus bicolor Giant, with fine, broad trumpet and cream-white perianth, a large flowering, strong growing variety; Narcissus bicolor Miss Ellen Terry, with clear yellow trumpet and white perianth; Narcissus Snow Queen, a white trumpet daffodil with curling petals; Narcissus Tom, with dark yellow trumpet and yellow perianth, a large flowering variety.

DETROIT.

The Market.

Business remains about the same as it has been for the last few weeks. Last week the market was flooded with a variety of stock, but toward the end of the week this glut was greatly relieved, partly by the street venders and also by a brisk spell of business.

In previous years Decoration day business has not amounted to much in this city, except with the few stores that are located near the cemeteries. At present it is too early to tell what this year will bring forth. There will be a slight rise in prices, although from the present outlook stock of all kinds will be plentiful. There is a good crop of carnations coming on; also a fine lot of Kaiserin and La Detroit roses.

Some fine sweet peas are now on sale.

Ferns, smilax, asparagus, boxwood, etc., are plentiful.

Various Notes.

George R. Muckey, who was found guilty of fleecing several florists of this vicinity by forging some checks, was sentenced to from four to fourteen years in Jackson penitentiary.

The Detroit Florists' Club, in session Wednesday evening, May 20, sent a letter of condolence to Mrs. Wm. Scott and family. The members also extended their sympathy with a wreath bearing the card of the Detroit Florists' Club. Friend Scott's death cast a gloom over the whole proceedings of the meeting.

One of our leading retail stores made a special effort to relieve the oversupply of roses and carnations last week. The big show window was stacked with roses and carnations bearing signs offering them at 25 cents and 50 cents per dozen. Many were disposed of, but no policeman was necessary to keep the crowd back. While the public patronizes the fakers freely, it seems to hold back when a first-class store sells so cheaply.

A red-hot ball game has been arranged for between the Detroit Cut Flower Supply House team and the Michigan Cut Flower Exchange team. Remember the day, June 5, at Belle Isle. Captains Pierce and Rahaley are both going around with blood in their eyes. Even though you are not a fan, be on hand to help cheer the boys along. Bring your wives and sweethearts, for Mrs. Wm. Dilger has kindly turned over the hospitalities of their home on Belle Isle to the club members for the evening, and such a kind invitation should bring out the whole club.

The fine weather of the last two weeks has created a big demand for outdoor stuff. It has also proven a blessing to the florists who do much planting, as it gives them a chance to get the bulk of the work done before Decoration day.

Fred Pautke, of Grosse Pointe, is sending some exceptionally fine pale pink and lavender peas to the city.

Wm. Hielscher reports some fine orders for hanging baskets through his ad in the Review. This firm is also making a specialty of wire trellises and is doing a big business.

The Kenneth Anderson Mfg. Co. has been called upon to fill many large orders for Revero hose. H. S.

The spring floral exhibition, given conjointly by the California State Floral Society and the Pacific Coast Horticultural Society, at Lyric hall, San Francisco, May 15 and 16, was one of the most successful ever seen here.

The largest single display of roses was that exhibited by E. Gill, of Oakland and West Berkeley, who showed over 300 vases of different varieties and was awarded the first prize, as well as for a magnificent lot of potted rhododendrons. F. Ludemann, of the Pacific Nurseries, received second prize for roses and also for rhododendrons.

Ferrari Bros. received the first prizes for greenhouse grown roses, and Domoto Bros. the second prize for the same articles.

In carnations, John H. Sievers & Co. and Ferrari Bros. captured the first prizes, with Domoto Bros. a close second. Chas. F. Fick was awarded a silver medal for his seedling carnations.

C. C. Morse & Co. had a magnificent display of sweet peas, for which they were awarded first prize, as well as for several new seedlings.

The display of pelargoniums was good, and the first prize was awarded to John H. Sievers & Co.

Ferrari Bros. and Chas. F. Fick received the first and second prizes for displays of lilies, and Ferrari Bros. and F. Ludemann received the first and second prizes, respectively, for their displays of cut iris.

Peonies were well represented, and the California Nursery Co., of Niles, captured the first prize.

H. Plath, of Ocean View, was awarded first prize for his display of decorative plants, foliage plants and ferns, while Chas. ## SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

The fleet has left San Francisco and everyone breathes a sigh of relief, for whatever benefit the merchants may have received from its stay, the florists were certainly money out from the first. Barring the green goods men, I have only found two or three retailers who received any benefit, and with the balance the bulk of their stock was consigned to the ash barrel. The plant dealers, however, were more fortunate, as the influx of so many people from out of town brought a number of purchasers who bought and had their plants shipped to their homes. But with those who dealt in cut flowers exclusively, one and all are glad that the excitement is over.

An effort was made by the growers during the first few days after the arrival to stiffen somewhat on the prices, but before the middle of the first week it was evident that quotations were going to smash and by the end of last week everything was away down.

Although flowers generally are getting to be just a little off crop and the supply is not so overwhelming, still the prices are ruinously low and will continue so for another ten days at least. It is useless to quote on carnations or roses, as it is only in extreme cases, among regular buyers and sellers where prices have been agreed upon previously, that any attention is paid to real values. The usual procedure is to buy as cheap as you can and for the seller to get out with as little loss as possible.

Easter lilies were sold during the present week at $2 per hundred stems, less than the price of the bulbs, but with an overstocked market and only a slight demand the growers will accept anything.

However, this will regulate itself in a short time and, with the lessening of the crops which is gradually taking place, the prices are bound to advance. There will also be a smaller supply of outside stuff, which always makes its heaviest appearance during the first week in May.

Various Notes.

E. N. Sandahl, of the Puget Sound Nursery & Seed Co., of Seattle, Wash., is in town.

Thos. Thompson, of Santa Cruz, made a short visit during the present week.

E. Leedham, of the Leedham Bulb Co,. visited the flower show and expressed himself as well pleased with the bulb showing.

The Elmhurst Floral Co. has opened a new store on Thirteenth street, Oakland.

Several of the largest Chinese growers who have long been located in the neighborhood of San Mateo have removed to the Alameda county side, and are growing sweet peas and asters in the neighborhood of San Lorenzo. G.

FISCHER'S GRAND FREESIA PURITY.

This is Fischer's Grand FREESIA PURITY, the finest Freesia ever offered to the trade, and the only one worth growing. The flower heads are of very large size, as can be seen by the cut, and are of glistening whiteness and of thick, heavy substance, making its keeping quality superior to all others. The stems, always stiff, can be grown two feet and over, making this magnificent Freesia one of the finest decorative flowers. It can be used entirely alone in that respect, or with other long stemmed flowers. The greatest care is taken by us to keep this beautiful Freesia pure and free from all danger of mixing by carefully picking off all seed pods and not allowing one to ripen and drop its seed in the ground, where it would surely grow the next season and work disaster, as it does not come true from seed. So beware of buying stock that has been increased from seed. You will always find Purity here in all its purity.

Send in your orders without delay, for last year the orders far exceeded the supply. This year we hope to fill all orders, and offer first and second grade bulbs for sale.

OREGON CHERRY FAIR.

Although the exact date has not yet been fixed, great progress is being made in the matter of the Oregon Cherry Fair, to be held at Salem early in July. It will be held under the auspices of the Salem Board of Trade and the Marion County Fruit Growers' Association, and these two organizations undoubtedly number in their membership the most active fruit growers, and especially cherry growers in the great fruit belt of the Willamette valley.

The present indications are that the cherry crop will be one of the best in the history of the industry in this section, and that means that it will be one of the best in the history of the world. The cherry trees are not overloaded, as they were in many instances last year, and the result will be a much finer quality and larger sized fruit. This means, without doubt, that the season will produce the largest and best cherries ever known. The peculiar climatic conditions in the central Willamette valley are especially adapted to the perfect development of this delicious fruit, and the conditions being favorable makes the predictions safe that we shall have a quality of fruit never before known. Furthermore, the quantity, owing to increased acreage, will be larger than ever. By consulting the figures of the canneries and shippers it is learned that the growth of the cherry industry contiguous to Salem has been marvelous in the last five years. It is believed that the acreage has quadrupled in the last two years, as it had nearly done in the preceding three years. Cherry growing is now beyond all experi-

ONIONS FOR BUNCHING

"I have tried a number of varieties of onions for the early green bunching crop," says W. F. Massey. "My practice has been altogether in the south, and my planting has been entirely in the autumn. I have used with great satisfaction sets of a white onion sold in Norfolk, Va., as the Queen. But it is not the early Queen of the northern catalogues, and is a larger and better onion. Sets of this planted in September gave in North Carolina fine bunching onions in February, but late in the season they run to seed and are spoiled. My greatest success has been with the Yellow and White Potato onion. These make no seed, but increase by multiplication of the bulbs. The smaller ones can be pulled off for bunching and the larger ones left to make the earliest of all ripe onions. The Yellow Potato onion makes a large bulb, but is not a good keeper, and must be sold early. The White Potato onion never grows to a large size, but is fine for bunching, and is the best keeper of any onion I have ever grown. I have lifted them in July and kept them over a year before planting again, and they were perfectly sound and unsprouted.

"I always use sets for the bunching crop. The sets of the Potato onion can be planted in the fall, deeply in well-manured ridges, so that when the soil is pulled from them in the spring the bulbs will be on the surface. I have grown with success, even in the south, fine crops of ripe onions from seed sown very early in spring, and I would not use sets for the ripe crop except of the Potato onion, with which sets are the only resource. For producing sets of the Queen onion I sow the seed thickly on soil of moderate fertility about the middle of April, and when the tops ripen I take them up and cure with the tops on, and never remove the tops till wanted for planting. In fact, I have found that all onions keep better if stored with the dry tops on."

CUCUMBERS.

The keeping of plants clean is one of the most troublesome parts of cucumber cultivation now that the weather is warm. Unless they are kept well sprayed, both red spider and thrips will get a hold and increase rapidly on account of the tender nature of the foliage. Water cannot be used with sufficient force to dislodge the pests when they have once got a good hold, so the idea should be to try to prevent them doing so by frequent syringing, made just as hard as the plants will stand without injury to the foliage.

An occasional spraying of some insecticide can also be used with good effect. Any of the numerous extracts of tobacco, diluted according to directions, are good. An emulsion of whale-oil soap is also good, and if a little kerosene is added it makes the mixture more effective. But the latter must be used in limited quantity or damage may result.

Our experience is that it is almost impossible to use any insecticides strong enough to destroy either red spider or thrips, if the plants are badly infested, without injury to the plants themselves, but they certainly do act as a preventive if used in time, as they can be put on sufficiently strong to make the foliage of the plants an unsuitable hibernating place for any of the troublesome pests.

A plentiful supply of water will be required by the plants now. If they are allowed to get dry and flaggy in the heat of the day, it will result in the dropping off of a good deal of the fruits in the earlier stages of their development. When the plant receives a check, either from want of water or any other cause, a good many of the cucumbers that are well set and have even reached a length of two or three inches, will begin to turn yellow, this yellowness being the first indication that the channels conducting the supply of nutriment to the fruits are failing to perform their proper functions, through some unsuitable condition, and the fruit, being robbed of the necessary supply of nutriment, drags out a miserable existence for some little time, but finally gives up the fight and drops off, to the dismay and chagrin of the cultivator, who often does not know what is the matter with his plants.

I don't see how any florist can do business without the Review.—Alfred Runnion, Sheldon, Ill.

MIDDLETOWN, O.—At the funeral of Rolan M. Clark, a veteran soldier and a member of the G. A. R., one of the floral tributes was so striking and so artistic as to attract much attention. It was made at the greenhouses of Henry Behrens and reflected great credit on that florist. It was appropriate in design, consisting of a United States flag five and a half feet high, made entirely of flowers and mounted on a white shield.

MANCHESTER, N. H.—The street and park commission has made a change in the plan for the placing of flowers in the parks and commons of the city. Instead of apportioning the work, as in former seasons, among the different florists of the city, the commission has called for competitive bids. This new method of procedure is said to be a serious disappointment to some florists, who have gone to the expense and trouble of ordering the plants, expecting to go ahead with the work as in previous years.

WELLSVILLE, N. Y.—Mrs. D. S. McEwen has purchased the stock of plants of the Wellsville Cut Flower Co., of which A. E. Boyce was manager. Mr. Boyce, however, has reserved for himself the stock of his scarlet crimson seedling carnation, Claribel Worth, which will be ready for dissemination, he says, in 1910.

PEORIA, ILL.—Chas. Loveridge is building two houses for roses. At James C. Murray's place, business has been active all the spring, especially in funeral work. White carnations and roses have been short in supply. Bedding out has started, but the demand got a setback on account of one of the large stores advertising 4-inch geraniums for 10 cents.

NEWPORT, R. I.—The store of Henry J. Hass, on Thames street, was visited recently by a burglar, but the report does not state the extent of the robbery. The thief entered through a window and departed through a rear door. Several other burglaries have also occurred lately in the same street. A former naval apprentice, George W. Klotz, was arrested as the criminal, and, as certain articles from the flower store were found in his possession, he confessed that he had stolen them, but denied all knowledge of the robberies in the other buildings.

Capital City Comment.

Commencements are in order, and consequently everybody is busy. They are earlier this year than last. Among the largest this week were those at Mt. Vernon Seminary, Gunston Institution and the Friends' Select School. Geo. Cook did the decorating at Mt. Vernon. The Gude Bros. Co. had the Friends' School. Every store was well represented in the bouquets sent to the different schools. Small & Son have several good wedding orders for the coming week.

The prospects for Memorial day are good. The advance orders are far ahead of this time last year.

Gude Bros. Co. has the usual order for the Illinois Republican Society for Gen. John A. Logan's tomb. This year it is a facsimile of the badge which was presented to Gen. Logan by congress after the surrender of Vicksburg, July 4, 1863, in honor of his distinguished services during that memorable siege.

The peony crop this year has been the best for years, if not the best ever. The store windows are full of them, selling at $1 per dozen, but the better grade brings $2.

Mountain laurel is fine and the market is loaded with it.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., J. W. Hill, Des Moines, Ia.; Vice-Pres., C. M. Hobbs, Bridgeport, Ind.; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester, N. Y.; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester, N. Y. The 33d annual convention will be held at Milwaukee, June 10 to 12, 1908.

OTIS G. BASSAGE, formerly with Brown Bros. Co., Rochester, N. Y., is now with the landscape department of C. R. Burr's nursery at Manchester, Conn.

BUYERS of Pacific coast products will find it worth while to keep watch of the Pacific Coast Department, which is a regular feature of the REVIEW.

THE Greening Nursery Co., Monroe, Mich., advertises "steam dug trees" in local papers, as though the method of digging were one to give added value to the stock.

CHARLES KLEHM, of Klehm's Nursery, Arlington Heights, Ill., says that the spring business, both wholesale, retail and landscaping, has been the heaviest they ever have had.

THE Beeville Nursery Co., Beeville, Tex., is just starting in business, making a specialty of Satsuma and Dugat oranges, but also growing roses, evergreens and greenhouse stock.

THE protest of Maltus & Ware, New York, on assessment of duty on evergreen seedlings, has been sustained by the general appraisers, following the decision in the Ouwerkerk case.

THE interest of Frank H. Wild in the Wild Bros. Nursery Co. has been sold to his brother, Henry N. Wild, who, with his two sons, Charles and Arthur, will continue the business without making any change in the name of the firm.

THE reports of a good season in the nursery business are general. Almost without exception the results are satisfactory and in many cases the volume of business was heavier than ever before, but many report that orders averaged smaller than last year.

THE Peterson Nursery, Chicago, reports steady progress in its landscape department. The experience has been that it is only necessary to secure a foothold—to show what can be done—to secure considerable business in neighborhoods where no landscaping has been done. In one community of fifteen country homes the execution of the first order led to work on eleven other places.

THE holders of large stocks of peonies appear to be of two minds as to the season's demand for plants for fall delivery. Some are so sure that the peony has been overdone that they are sacrificing their stock, while others are equally confident that there will be a steadily increasing demand for the best sorts, true to name, and are bending their energies toward roguing their rows during the blooming season.

STOP AT CHICAGO.

The committee arranging for the comfort of the members of the American Association of Nurserymen en route to the Milwaukee convention have arranged for accommodations at the Great Northern hotel, corner Jackson boulevard and Dearborn street, for those who may wish to stop off in Chicago en route to Milwaukee. The management would like to receive word from all those who may desire accommodations for over-night. Carl Cropp and B. E. Gage are the Chicago committee.

WEST CHESTER, PA.

P. M. Sharples has purchased from Hoopes, Bro. & Thomas, of Maple Avenue Nurseries, 40,000 plants, generally shrubbery, which will be used in beautifying the extensive grounds about the Sharples villa, on the ridge, West Goshen township. The price said to have been paid for this large purchase of rare and fine shrubbery, evergreens, trees, etc., is about $25,000.

The plants cover a plot of ground of about twenty-six acres in extent, which belongs to Mr. Sharples, being a part of the old Bishop property, on the Boot road, in West Goshen, and attached now to the large plot, a part of the grounds about his big mansion.

Hoopes, Bro. & Thomas some time ago leased the land from the Bishop estate and have used it for nursery purposes. It was purchased by Mr. Sharples subject to the lease, which has another year to run. The firm has, as stated, planted it with shrubbery and would have had to move or burn the plants next spring if not sold. The nursery firm, therefore, having disposed of the lot in bulk, simply relinquish their lease and Mr. Sharples gains possession of his land, as well as 40,000 pieces of shrubbery, which can be removed at will and planted wherever needed on the large villa grounds by his landscape gardener.

REAPPRAISEMENTS.

NURSERY STOCK.—From Ebbinge & Van Groos, Boskoop, exported March 26, 1908; entered at New York. File No. 48747. Invoice No. 7806. Findings of Hay, G. A.: Rhododendron ponticum, 2 yrs.; entered at 4 florins per 100. Add packing. Discount 5 per cent. No advance.

NURSERY STOCK.—From H. M. Hardyzer, Boskoop, exported March 15, 1908; entered at New York. File No. 48637. Invoice No. 3478. Findings of Hay, G. A.: Advanced by addition of freight and shipping charges added on invoice but deducted on entry.

NURSERY STOCK.—From Koster & Co., Boskoop, exported March 19, 1908; entered at New York. File No. 48638. Invoice No. 3481. Findings of Hay, G. A.: Advanced by addition of freight and forwarding included and deducted on invoice.

SHRUBBERY.

One of the recent articles of the publicity service of the National Council of Horticulture was devoted to a discussion of the principles of shrubbery planting, in part as follows:

Shrubbery, as a rule, is used as a frame for a lawn, and the design of the shrubbery frame should be formed on the same principles as any other frame—a picture frame, the border of a rug, etc. That is, the frame should harmonize with the picture it encloses. The average shrubbery plantation defies this doctrine and is a thing of shreds and patches, made up of showy bushes planted with little regard for the effect of shape, color and general appearance.

In choosing plants to grow side by side, consider the foliage and flowers as carefully as you consider the shape of the bush. Do not put large masses of light green foliage next to masses of dark, or you have a patchy effect. By choosing your shrubs carefully with regard to flowering time, the border may be made a delight in the summer, with one or more shrubs always in bloom. Two shrubs that flower at the same time should not be placed close together if the colors of their flowers clash.

WORCESTER, MASS.

Among the exhibits at the weekly show of the Worcester County Horticultural Society, in Horticultural hall, May 21, was an unusually fine display of yellow calla lilies, or Calla Elliottiana, by George McWilliam, gardener for Mrs. G. M. Whitin. This exhibit was not only noticeable as being the first of its kind at the meetings of this society, but the color of the flowers was said to be a deeper, more golden shade of yellow than is generally seen in plants of this class. Mr. McWilliam was awarded a prize for these and for some vases of lily of the valley.

Among members of the trade who won prizes in other sections were A. W. Hixon and A. L. Bemis.

The next exhibition will be June 4, and there will then be exhibitions every Thursday until and including September 24, and also October 8 and November 12.

RICHMOND, IND.

New chrysanthemums from the famous hybridists of France have been sent to America to be grown for exhibition at the national flower show at Chicago, November 6 to 15. The E. G. Hill Co. has received consignments of chrysanthemum novelties from Calvat, of Grenoble, and Nonin, of Paris, and more are on the way from Rozain-Boucharlat.

These are varieties as yet unnamed. They will be christened, perhaps, with the names of American women. Mr. Hill will ask their originators for permission to do this.

NORWICH, CONN.

At a meeting of the New London County Horticultural Society, held May 18, Alexander MacLellan, the landscape gardener of Newport, R. I., delivered an able address on his specialty, the dahlia. President T. W. Head and Vice-president N. P. Carey were absent, and S. A. Gilbert, one of the directors, presided.

Mr. MacLellan treated his subject both historically and practically and succeeded in making his remarks interesting as well as instructive.

ALTOONA, PA.—Myers Bros. have installed a handsome new refrigerator in their store at Eleventh avenue and Thirteenth street.

LITTLETON, COLO.—S. T. Culp is building a greenhouse, 40x80 feet, on Harrison street, on the ground formerly used for a tennis court. The estimated cost is $3,500. One of the most improved systems of hot water heating will be installed.

ST. PAUL.

The Market.

Trade this month has been fairly good, though the great number of rainy days have tended to keep the volume of business down.

Decoration day prospects are quite promising. Lilacs will be past their prime and snowballs not in full bloom for the occasion, so that the florists will be called upon to supply the most of the flowers for decorating.

Country trade is increasing every day, the demand for school graduates and for weddings being brisk.

Club Meeting.

The Twin City Florists' Club met at Holm & Olson's store May 19. Owing to the busy planting season being on, the attendance was somewhat smaller than usual.

The committee to draft a new constitution and by-laws reported and the matter was laid over for action until the next meeting. It is proposed to incorporate under the name of the Minnesota State Florists' Association.

Mr. Meyer's paper on "Shrubs for Florists" was put over till the next meeting.

Albert Christensen, of the Minneapolis Electric Co., gave an interesting outline on "Growing Plants by Electric Light," and offered to give a more complete talk on the subject at some future time.

Alexander Millar, Jr., the last two years fireman for the Green Floral and Nursery Co., of Dallas, Tex., has leased the plant of the Terre Haute Rose & Carnation Co., of this place, wholesale growers of cut flowers.

Mr. Millar, who took charge April 1, is one of the foremost growers of the country, and will enlarge the plant at once, to take better care of growing trade. Dr. Reiss will remain interested in the company.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

One would like to say something pleasant by way of variety, but it is out of the question. We are in the midst of summer weather and the business is regular summer business. There are plenty of fine roses of all kinds and Beauties in abundance. These would take care of what trade there is, but that would not take into consideration the quantities of poorer grades of stock, much of which is being lost. This not only gives the wholesalers lots of work, but is hard on the growers.

Nearly all of our retailers are handling plants, which keeps them busy and they do not notice the dropping off in the cut flower trade so much.

The plantsmen seem to be doing a thriving trade and getting about the same prices as in other years. The weather is in their favor, as there has been no sign of frost for so long that people commenced bedding earlier than usual, which saves crowding so much into one week.

Banquet for William Hamilton.

At the last meeting of the Florists' Club, announcement having been made of the resignation of William Hamilton as superintendent of the Allegheny parks, after thirty years' service, a number of his old friends got together and arranged for a little informal supper in his honor. Last Wednesday evening, therefore, in a private room in the McCarty cafe, William Hamilton was surrounded at table by James Semple, William Falconer, Fred Burki, P. S. Randolph, John Bader, Henry Negley, E. C. Reineman, John Wyland, T. P. Langhans, Julius Ludwig, Gustav Ludwig, E. C. Ludwig, De Forest Ludwig, John Jones, W. A. Clarke, David Fraser, Thomas Price, George Moore, H. Frishkom, William Loew and P. J. Demas.

After a plentiful repast, the toastmaster, Mr. Falconer, in his original way, called on one after another for remarks. It was found that most of those present had known Mr. Hamilton from thirty to fifty years and many pleasant recollections were recalled, after which Mr. Hamilton, who was somewhat affected, spoke from his chair, saying that he had spent almost a lifetime in his office. He felt grateful that now, when he desired to retire, his friends should rally around him with such expressions of love and esteem. After all had shaken hands and wished their old friend many years of happiness, all went to their homes feeling that there are other things besides business.

Hoo-Hoo.

State of Business.

The market has seen large receipts of stock of all kinds, while trade has been a little slow. A few rainy days shut off some business the retailers might have had. There are plenty of good roses of all kinds. American Beauties are coming in plentifully, while Bride and Maid are in greater supply than the demand calls for. Carnations have been plentiful and of fairly good quality, but the indications are that there will not be any surplus for Memorial day, for they are the principal flower called for. There will be no lilac or snowballs to amount to anything. Cape jasmine will be over; so the word comes from Texas, where most of it comes from. What has been coming in last week is short of stem and small of flower. The outlook for trade for the week, though, seems to be good and the store men anticipate a good business.

Various Notes.

The Park Floral Co. is again shorthanded at the Broadway store. The young man who recently came from Chicago seems to have had poor circulation, for in just three weeks his feet got so cold he had to hurry home without taking time to say goodbye. Truly, homesickness is a terrible disease and florists might profit by Uncle Sam's example. He is said to carry candy in the commissary for new recruits.

C. A. Benson is picking some fine sweet peas. E. S. K.

Salisbury, Vt.—Charles Bingham has purchased George Sheldon's greenhouse and will move it to his father's farm, east of town.

Hudson, Mass.—E. C. Ross aided in the observance of Mothers' day by presenting, according to a previous announcement, fifty white carnations to the first fifty persons who applied for them after the opening of the store in the morning. The claimants were numerous and the flowers were disposed of within a few minutes.

Huntington, Ind.—Tony Bieberich, lately with D. C. Noble & Co., at Columbia City, Ind., has gone into business here, taking charge of the establishment known as the East End Greenhouses. The place comprises two houses, 25x134, which are being stocked with a general line of cut flowers and plants. Various improvements are being made, including the installation of a new heating system. The business will be conducted in the future under the firm name of Hatten & Bieberich.

GERANIUMS

One of the best things in the market, the American Beauty Geranium, a clear, bright cerise, just about the color of a good Pink Lawson carnation. The habit is very pleasing, rather dwarf and very stocky. It is a common thing to see 4 to 6 large bunches of flowers on a plant in a 3 to 5-inch pot. Clusters average 4 to 5 inches in diameter. It is a very free bloomer; we think it is freer than any we grow and we grow a great many Geraniums. We grow 8 to 10 varieties.

Stock of American Beauty is extra fine but limited as to quantity. We offer you—

2-inch pot plants at $6.00 per 100.
3-inch pot plants at 10.00 "
4-inch pot plants at 18.00 "
5-inch pot plants at 25.00 "

The 4 and 5-inch pots are very stocky and bushy; have 3 to 5 large flowers on now.

SALVIA PRIDE OF ZURICH.

We have now several forms of the Brazilian Salvia splendens, and the typical kind as well as the varieties have long been justly valued as flowering plants for the greenhouse. Late summer and autumn, however, are usually regarded as the flowering period of this member of the sage family, but in the variety at the head of this note we have one that can be had in flower during the spring months. This is fully borne out, says the Gardeners' Magazine, by the fact that at the spring meetings of the Royal Horticultural Society H. B. May & Sons, of Edmonton, have shown numerous examples of this salvia thickly studded with their bright scarlet blossoms. For summer bedding Salvia splendens has much in its favor, but up to now its comparatively late season of blooming was a decided drawback. With this compact-growing and early variety, the just-named difficulty will disappear. As Salvia splendens is of easy propagation and culture, this newer variety (for it is not absolutely new) should soon be generally met with in gardens.

PTYCHORAPHIS SIEBERTIANA.

The genus ptychoraphis is exceptional among eastern palms in its elegance, the three or four species known, all of them Malayan, being as graceful as Cocos Weddelliana and Geonoma gracilis. P. Singaporensis and P. augusta, which are already in cultivation, although comparatively recent introductions, possess good decorative qualities, and in the new species, Ptychoraphis Siebertiana, which Sander & Sons have named in compliment to Herr Siebert, the director of the palm garden at Frankfort, the English gardening press thinks they have a most promising palm. In the pose and form of the young plant there is a resemblance to Dæmonorops fissus, but there are no spines on the ptychoraphis. The stems are slender, in the case of mature plants probably tufted, with elegant arching leaves, the petioles clothed with small brownish scales, the leaflets regular, ten inches long, three-fourths inches wide, tapering gradually to a long thread-like point. When young they are copper-colored, changing with age to a rich green.

THE DOGWOODS.

The dogwoods are among the most valuable of shrubs, being especially adapted for moist and shady places. Some of them have richly colored twigs, which produce a fine color effect in winter. All are hardy and adapt themselves readily to a variety of soils and climates.

Flowering dogwood, Cornus florida, is showy in flower and also beautiful in autumn, when the leaves change color before falling. The plant is of tree form, rather slow in growth, and ordinarily from ten to fifteen feet high. It has branches spreading almost horizontally. The flowers appear early in spring and in full bloom the shrubs have a striking appearance, owing to the whorls of leaves that surround the blossoms. It bears a bright scarlet fruit.

Red osier, Cornus stolonifera, grows freely in marshy ground in Canada and the northern states. Its main stem is prostrate and from it many shoots grow six to ten feet high. These shoots are green in summer but scarlet in winter. The flowers are white or cream and are followed by white fruit. A variegated-leaved variety can be obtained and in some respects is best, having leaves that in summer are broadly and irregularly margined with yellow and white.

A NEW NEPHRODIUM.

Among the new plants exhibited at the centenary exhibition at Ghent was Nephrodium gracillimum. This is described as an elegant variety of the Australian Nephrodium (Lastrea) decompositum, which is variable in the size, texture, and cutting of its fronds, and in the habit of its usually wide-creeping rhizomes. Sander & Sons obtained this plant from Brisbane, and it has proved so free a grower and the fronds are so finely divided that the Gardeners' Chronicle says it is likely to become a favorite fern with market growers. It has a close-growing rhizome, from which spring numerous fronds from two to three feet long, the stipes wiry, scaly at the base, the lowest pinnæ twelve inches long, those above being gradually shorter, the whole forming a deltoid elegant frond of pleasing appearance. The pinnules are as finely divided as in Onychium Japonicum. The cultivated forms of N. decompositum are so different from N. gracillimum that it might reasonably be doubted that they are forms of the same species. There are, however, specimens of wild plants from Australia which prove their identity.

Greenhouse Heating.

WRONG INSTALLATION.

I have an east and west greenhouse, 14x40 feet, heated by a Wilks hot water heater. There are three benches, with three 1½-inch flow pipes under each side bench and four under the middle bench. There is one 1½-inch return pipe under each bench. The boiler is about two feet lower than the pipes, which gradually rise about fifteen inches. The expansion tank is at the highest point. This arrangement did not prove entirely satisfactory. It was hard work to keep the heat up on extremely cold or windy days. What change would you suggest, using the 1½-inch pipe? I am planning to build a 10-foot lean-to and wish to use 4-inch pipe. How should it be arranged? E. W. G.

If I read the description of your heating plant correctly, it is little wonder you have difficulty in maintaining heat in the house. It is installed wrong end to; that is, you have too many flow pipes and too few and too small returns. If you will rearrange the heating plant by carrying one 2-inch pipe from the boiler under the ridge to the far end of the house, there divide it to supply three coils of 1½-inch pipe of four pipes each under each of the three benches, and then reunite these near the boiler into a common 2-inch return, you will have the plant right end to and sufficient for a temperature of 60 degrees. Connect the expansion tank by a ¾-inch pipe to the main return within a foot of the boiler and carry it six to ten feet above the highest point in the heating system, and note results.

GREENHOUSE CHIMNEYS.

There is one matter which I have seldom seen mentioned in the columns of the Review, namely, the chimney. I have an iron stack now, and need another. Would a brick chimney be better? What would be the inside dimensions of the chimney and the thickness of the walls? I have one boiler and wish to set another for emergencies. I should like to use the same stack for both. Would it be better to have a separate flue for each? What height would be best? I have a hot water heater and use coke for fuel. Would it be best to have a door at the bottom of the stack for accumulation of soot? L. Y.

The brick chimney is more permanent than the metal stack, although the initial cost of the chimney is much greater than that of the metal stack. The general rule used to determine the size of a stack is as follows: The area of the cross section of the stack should be equal to one-ninth the area of the grate surface of the boilers. If metal stacks were to be used, we should advise putting up a stack for each boiler, but if a brick stack is to be employed and the boilers are arranged in battery, use a breeching to connect them with the main stack. The area of the stack should be one-ninth the combined area of the grate surface of all the boilers to be cared for. The height of the stack is a matter of location and the character of draft desired. Tall stacks give stronger natural draft than short ones, but the prevailing type of construction on large power plants today is a short stack and forced draft. For low pressure work the natural draft of the chimney or stack will be sufficient. The thickness of the wall is determined by the type of construction and the height of the chimney.

STEAM FOR FIVE HOUSES.

We have a block of five greenhouses and desire some information regarding them. Houses No. 1 and No. 2, each 25x132 feet, are carnation houses and require a night temperature of 55 degrees. Houses No. 3 and No. 4, each 15x132 feet, are in roses and should have a temperature of 60 degrees. House No. 5 is 9x132 feet and is for miscellaneous stock, requiring a temperature of

Money Saved

Money saved in operating expenses—and at the same time increasing the efficiency of your plant—must be an interesting subject to every florist. The installation of

Rauch Bros., Monett, Mo., testify:

"We believe the Capitol Boiler to be the best Boiler for greenhouse heating on the market, being easy to handle and economical on fuel. One of our competitors has 30,000 square feet of glass with a ———— Boiler and used over $1,000 worth of coal during the same time that we, with 15,000 square feet of glass, with our Capitol Boiler, only used $158 worth of coal."

ABOUT THE HEAT THAT GETS AWAY

YOU know that the longer the fire travels, constantly coming in contact with the water-ways, the more the heat is harnessed and the less goes up chimney. So far so good—but of still greater importance is the extracting or absorbing of the greatest amount of heat directly in the combustion chamber when the burning gases are hottest. This is what is accomplished by the "Burnham" cross fire channels with their side flue openings, which channels are surrounded on three sides by extra deep water-ways. The heat that these deep water-ways fail to absorb is then practically all taken up by the fire travel in its journey three times the boiler's length. So these are the reasons why, for greenhouse economy, you can't beat the "Burnham" Hot Water or Steam.

55 degrees. The houses run east and west, with a glass gable in the west end. The boiler is under the shed at the east end. How should each be piped for steam and what horse-power of horizontal tubular boiler is required? We get water from a spring-pond and should like to get your advice as to the water plant. What can we do to avoid a boiler-pit?

H. O.

Regarding the direction and piping of your houses, will say my personal preference with even-span houses is that they run north and south, with the work-room and heating plant at the north end.

Houses No. 1 and No. 2 should each be provided with a 3-inch flow under the ridge and fourteen 1¼-inch returns the length of the house. Houses No. 3 and No. 4 should each be provided with a 2½-inch flow under the ridge and ten 1¼-inch returns, while house No. 5 should have a 2-inch riser under the ridge and seven 1¼-inch returns.

By installing a return steam trap you can arrange the boiler on the level of the greenhouses. This will require the overhead risers as suggested, and all the water of condensation will be returned into a hot well, from which it can be lifted to the boiler by the steam trap. The water plant can be arranged by use of a ram, windmill or power pump driven by motor, gas engine or steam engine. I am inclined to believe that either gasoline or steam power will be most satisfactory. The water would be delivered direct to mains or into an elevated storage tank as desired.

If you use a gravity system, the water level in the boiler should be at least two feet below the level of the lowest radiating pipes in the houses; more would be better. The boilers should have a rated capacity to carry 4,000 square feet of radiation or more. One return tubular boiler, rated at forty horse-power, should be sufficient to heat this plant.

The Market.

There has been no change in the state of the market. May 25 it was about as poor as it was last week, and were it not for the prospects of a good Decoration day trade the outlook would be discouraging. We are having hot weather and it shows on the quality of the stock. Many of the carnations arrive badly used up. Home-grown stock, and that shipped but a short distance,

Greenhouse Heating.

WRONG INSTALLATION.

I have an east and west greenhouse, 14x40 feet, heated by a Wilks hot water heater. There are three benches, with three 1½-inch flow pipes under each side bench and four under the middle bench. There is one 1½-inch return pipe under each bench. The boiler is about two feet lower than the pipes, which gradually rise about fifteen inches. The expansion tank is at the highest point. This arrangement did not prove entirely satisfactory. It was hard work to keep the heat up on extremely cold or windy days. What change would you suggest, using the 1½-inch pipe? I am planning to build a 10-foot lean-to and wish to use 4-inch pipe. How should it be arranged? E. W. G.

If I read the description of your heating plant correctly, it is little wonder you have difficulty in maintaining heat in the house. It is installed wrong end to; that is, you have too many flow pipes and too few and too small returns. If you will rearrange the heating plant by carrying one 2-inch pipe from the boiler under the ridge to the far end of the house, there divide it to supply three coils of 1½-inch pipe of four pipes each under each of the three benches, and then reunite these near the boiler into a common 2-inch return, you will have the plant right end to and sufficient for a temperature of 60 degrees. Connect the expansion tank by a ¾-inch pipe to the main return within a foot of the boiler and carry it six to ten feet above the highest point in the heating system, and note results.

GREENHOUSE CHIMNEYS.

There is one matter which I have seldom seen mentioned in the columns of the Review, namely, the chimney. I have an iron stack now, and need another. Would a brick chimney be better? What would be the inside dimensions of the chimney and the thickness of the walls? I have one boiler and wish to set another for emergencies. I should like to use the same stack for both. Would it be better to have a separate flue for each? What height would be best? I have a hot water heater and use coke for fuel. Would it be best to have a door at the bottom of the stack for accumulation of soot? L. Y.

The brick chimney is more permanent than the metal stack, although the initial cost of the chimney is much greater than that of the metal stack. The general rule used to determine the size of a stack is as follows: The area of the cross section of the stack should be equal to one-ninth the area of the grate surface of the boilers. If metal stacks were to be used, we should advise putting up a stack for each boiler, but if a brick stack is to be employed and the boilers are arranged in battery, use a breeching to connect them with the main stack. The area of the stack should be one-ninth the combined area of the grate surface of all the boilers to be cared for. The height of the stack is a matter of location and the character of draft desired. Tall stacks give stronger natural draft than short ones, but the prevailing type of construction on large power plants today is a short stack and forced draft. For low pressure work the natural draft of the chimney or stack will be sufficient. The thickness of the wall is determined by the type of construction and the height of the chimney.

STEAM FOR FIVE HOUSES.

We have a block of five greenhouses and desire some information regarding them. Houses No. 1 and No. 2, each 25x132 feet, are carnation houses and require a night temperature of 55 degrees. Houses No. 3 and No. 4, each 15x132 feet, are in roses and should have a temperature of 60 degrees. House No. 5 is 9x132 feet and is for miscellaneous stock, requiring a temperature of Money saved in operating expenses—and at the same time increasing the efficiency of your plant—must be an interesting subject to every florist. The installation of

in your greenhouse means positive money-saving in operating expenses. For instance, less coal.

Rauch Bros., Monett, Mo., testify:

"We believe the Capitol Boiler to be the best Boiler for greenhouse heating on the market, being easy to handle and economical on fuel. One of our competitors has 30,000 square feet of glass with a ———— Boiler and used over $1,000 worth of coal during the same time that we, with 15,000 square feet of glass, with our Capitol Boiler, only used $158 worth of coal."

ABOUT THE HEAT THAT GETS AWAY

YOU know that the longer the fire travels, constantly coming in contact with the water-ways, the more the heat is harnessed and the less goes up chimney. So far so good—but of still greater importance is the extracting or absorbing of the greatest amount of heat directly in the combustion chamber when the burning gases are hottest. This is what is accomplished by the "Burnham" cross fire channels with their side flue openings, which channels are surrounded on three sides by extra deep water-ways. The heat that these deep water-ways fail to absorb is then practically all taken up by the fire travel in its journey three times the boiler's length. So these are the reasons why, for greenhouse economy, you can't beat the "Burnham" Hot Water or Steam.

Burn hard or soft coal. Send for the new boiler catalog.

holds out the best, but even this is small and not of much value. Some fair roses are to be had, but by far the majority of them are small and pop right open. The red varieties, such as Richmond, are awfully poor property.

And where has the demand for flowers gone? There is practically none. The buyers stroll around, visiting the commission houses, and pick up a little here and a little there and the total sales hardly make an impression on the quantity of flowers on hand. It appears to be a fact that the number of flowers that found their way into the dump last week was greater than at any time so far this year. There was no demand. It was impossible to move the stock at any price. The wholesale men had to pay out good money to have a great portion of it hauled away.

But Decoration day is upon us and we are hoping for a good business. The wholesalers report many advance orders. Every indication points to a good, lively demand. Many are predicting a great glut of stock. But from the way that orders are coming in I believe that we all will have a good business. Peonies will be the main crop, and there will be thousands of them. Never has there been a greater profusion of outdoor flowers in bloom at this time. The country is a mass of bloom, and those who have access to this almost unlimited supply surely will have no occasion to visit a florist. But there will be thousands of others who will not have this good fortune, and to them the florist will be a necessity. Flowers will be cheap and this will bring trade from a class of people who otherwise would not buy any flowers at all, so I believe that it is about as broad as it is long. I believe that this will be one of the greatest Decoration days in the history of the flower business.

Smilax is beginning to be a trifle scarce, but there is plenty of Sprengeri, also asparagus. New ferns from the south are in, but we are still selling the winter eastern ferns and the buyers prefer them, even at the higher price; they hold up so much better.

Lilies are good property, especially longiflorums, which are not equal to the demand.

MILWAUKEE.

The Market.

With plenty of indoor and outdoor stock coming in, business assumed a slow but sure gait last week. Green goods, which are of a fine quality, are about equal to the demand.

The bright weather of late has hastened indoor crops, and prospects now are that there will be more stock for Memorial day, especially in carnations, than was anticipated during the recent dark spell.

Various Notes.

The Holton & Hunkel Co. reports that advance orders for Decoration day are away ahead of those on hand a week before Easter; also that prices will be about the same as at that time, if not better.

Robert Zepnick, formerly associated with his father in Bay View, some time ago embarked in the retail business at 147 Lincoln avenue. The building, in which the south side postoffice and bank are also located, is a new structure, and Mr. Zepnick thinks the stand is O. K. His Easter trade was beyond expectations.

E. Haasch has improved his property on Hopkins road, adjoining the Union cemetery, by removing the small conservatory and erecting a two-story building. The first floor is used for a flower store by himself, while the second story is utilized for dwelling purposes. He no doubt has a fine stand, especially for spring trade.

Joe Kremer has begun to remodel his greenhouses on Center street, between Seventh and Eighth streets.

At the northwest corner of the city, the Mueller & Schroeder Co. reports all young carnations in the field May 22. They are now busy planting asters and gladioli. They had a large lot of the last named last year and, as they were a good investment, will again have a big batch.

Everybody was busy planting out, as the weather was favorable. The writer saw some outdoor lily of the valley which was of a fine quality.

The next club meeting takes place June 4 and every member ought to attend, as it promises to be an interesting and profitable one.

The River Front Improvement Association is now busy filling in good soil and removing rubbish preparatory to planting vines and beds. Milwaukee is not so slow, after all.

BALTIMORE.

The Market.

Business remains at a standstill. It has been many years since business has been so backward at this time of the year, especially in the plant line.

It seems as though the people are tiring of the once favorite geranium, S. A. Nutt, and are selecting the lighter colors of pink. There is a heavy run on the scarlet sage, Bonfire. Coleus is scarce and poor. Peonies have made their appearance and are selling well, especially red. Sweet peas are still a glut, but are poor and faded. Lilacs are over and snowballs and bridal wreath have taken their place in large quantities.

Various Notes.

A large delegation of florists from Lexington market went before the mayor with a petition to have the fakers removed from the streets adjacent to the market, and were assured that he would take the matter up at once.

R. Vincent, Jr., & Sons Co. invited the Gardeners' Club to visit its place and inspect its new geranium houses, which contain over 100 new varieties, besides the old standard sorts. This firm is one of the largest growers of geraniums in the United States. R. Vincent, Sr., is in Europe, buying up the novelties for the next season. He sailed March 30.

Henry F. Michell, of Philadelphia, being in Baltimore last week, attended the club's meeting and gave a talk on the pure seed law.

Halliday Bros. have a fine field of peonies, which contains about 5,000 roots. The plants are just loaded with buds, which have commenced to burst and show color. The firm has planted out about 30,000 carnations in the open ground.

Mr. Lutz had a fine vase of a white seedling carnation at the club.

William A. Summers has opened a flower store at 1602 Pennsylvania avenue.

Club Meeting.

The regular monthly meeting of the New Orleans Horticultural Society took place May 21. Premium lists of the chrysanthemum and flower show, to be held November 12 to 15, were distributed among the members. The prizes are quite liberal and offer a fine inducement to the exhibitors.

The committee of arrangement has not decided yet about the plans of the meeting.

J. A. Newsham, chairman of the committee, is expected every day back from Central America, with sixty more boxes of orchids.

All the members present endorsed highly the work of the crop pest commission, supported by the state.

A circular issued by Professor Newell was read. He invites the public and all interested in the subject to be present at a lecture which he will deliver next Saturday evening at the Washington Artillery hall, on the extermination of the black ant, one of our most destructive insects.

Mayor Martin A. Behrman was made an honorary member of the New Orleans Horticultural Society.

A vote of thanks was tendered to A. Alost for his fine reception at his place, and also to the Jos. Steckler Seed Co. for valuable accommodation in furnishing transportation thereto.

R. Eichling and J. Colongue had an exhibition of nicely grown plants.

President R. Reinecke was prevented from assisting, on account of sickness at home.

H. Doescher was elected a member of the society.

Various Notes.

The German Gardeners' Club took a good recess by spending a day last week on the shore of Lake Pontchartrain. They say they had the most astonishingly fine dinner they ever had for the little money they spent. M. M. L.

COMMERCIAL VARIETIES.

Cypripedium Insigne.

Of all cypripediums, C. insigne is still the most valuable one commercially. The fact that it will succeed fairly well in almost any temperature, and is slow to resent adverse conditions, causes it often to be greatly neglected. We doubt if there are many plants which will give better returns for the care bestowed upon them and the space occupied than these cypripediums. One advantage with these flowers is that if the market does not want them one day, they can be carried over a week or even a month in good condition, something which cannot be done with any other of the florists' staples.

While this orchid is often kept the year around in a warm house, we have seen equally fine plants grown in ordinary greenhouses. At the present time there can be no better place than a coldframe in which a good bed of coal ashes has been spread. The plants are better elevated on pots or pans, and if their tops come within eighteen inches of the glass they will be all right. Syringe them overhead on all clear afternoons, but leave the foliage dry on damp days. Provided pots are well filled with roots, give them a little weak cow manure water once a week. Keep a little air in the frame all the time and shade the glass with kerosene and white lead.

The plants can be left in the frames until the middle of September. Treated in this way they will make a splendid growth and flower profusely, far better than if kept in a crowded greenhouse, far from the light. The golden yellow C. insigne Sanderæ is still too high-priced for florists. A decade hence, however, we expect to see it a popular commercial orchid, bringing at least double the price of the ordinary types.

Dendrobiums.

Dendrobiums are mostly East Indian orchids and prefer a rather close, warm and moist atmosphere while making their growths. The popular florists' sorts, such as nobile in variety, Wardianum, formosum, giganteum and Phalænopsis Schroederiana, do specially well in a small house well up to the light, not too heavily shaded and syringed freely every clear afternoon, the ventilators then being closed. A chink of air may be given again toward evening.

A house in which palms are grown may also be utilized for these plants, provided the shading on the glass is not too heavy. Any repotting or rebasketing should have been done after flowering. Roots will now be appearing freely and it will help the plants to give them a surfacing of fresh sphagnum moss, if this has not been done. Good plants may be grown in pure sphagnum moss, if care is taken not to overwater them.

POINSETTIAS.

What is the best time to propagate poinsettias, and the method of cultivation to bring them in bloom for Christmas? R. P. & Co.

If you wish to grow your poinsettias in pots or benches for cutting, you can start propagating at once. Cuttings are not difficult to root if you can give them a little bottom heat. Keep them shaded from the sun and do not allow the sand to become in any way dry. The best cuttings are those rubbed off with a heel. Trim the leaves off fairly close before inserting them. If your stock plants are still dormant, get them under way as soon as possible. They will soon produce a quantity of new shoots.

If you want plants in pans for Christmas sales, it is too early yet to propagate. In June and July is sufficiently early. I have had nice, dwarf plants struck during August, but we think from June 15 to July 10 the best season to root cuttings for pans. At that season no bottom heat is needed and any ordinary greenhouse or frame may be used for propagating purposes.

Pot off into small pots containing a mixture of leaf-mold, loam and sand before the plants become in any way hardened. For bench culture you can plant out as soon as the little pots are filled with roots. If you want large bracts, space them twelve inches apart each way. For pan culture the number depends on the size of pan used. As a rule, three will suffice for one six inches in diameter; five for an 8-inch, and seven for a 10-inch.

The plants must be carefully watered. Too much or too little will cause a loss of foliage. They can be grown quite cool until bracts begin to form, when a minimum temperature of 60 degrees is desirable. Move into a slightly cooler house when the bracts are well expanded. Feed with liquid manure once a week as the bracts develop, but make the doses moderate. Poinsettias are of easy culture, but like all other plants need careful treatment, especially in watering, to insure best results. For the final potting use such compost as you would place your chrysanthemums or geraniums in. You will find frequent cultural references about poinsettias in the REVIEW'S Seasonable Suggestions. C. # THE RETAIL FLORIST.....

HOUSE DECORATING.

For Social Functions.

How many times has some lady come into your store to get information in regard to "my daughter's wedding"? Quite often, you will say. If that lady chanced to be some wealthy person, no doubt you made arrangements to call at the house to talk it over, for you were anxious to get the job. But if you judged, from the way the lady talked, that she meant only to spend from $10 to $20, what then? The chances are she went away without your even inquiring as to her name.

From your store she went across the avenue to one of your competitors, who accorded her all the information she wanted, then secured an appointment at the house and finally landed the decoration.

Small Work Leads to Larger.

You will say there is not enough in these small decorations to pay for going after them. Of course, you would make more clear profit on a funeral design at $15 than on a decoration at that figure, but you must take into consideration the advertising you will derive from the decoration. At the wedding or reception there may be a number of prospective customers to whom the pleased hostess will recommend your work. Often you may get a new customer in this way.

The next time you get an opportunity to call at someone's home and offer a few suggestions, do not let it slip by.

Don't Alter Your Prices.

When you are being shown through the different rooms to be decorated, ask enough questions so that you will be well posted as to what is wanted, but do not do all the talking. Take a general survey of the surroundings and try to get some idea as to how much the people wish to spend. Make a price for doing the work at so much for palms, so much for smilax, flowers, etc. If your price strikes your prospective customer as being too high, suggest the use of a few less palms, etc., but do not cut your price. It will pay you to be just a little independent here.

Having finally received orders to go ahead with the work, make note of what you will need in the way of palms, ferns, greens, etc. If you will need any greens or flowers that you do not regularly keep in stock, be sure you order in time. Should you be at a loss as to where to order the various greens used in decorating, a perusal of the advertisements in the Review will help you out.

Hints on Handling the Work.

When the day of the wedding or party arrives, get an early start on the job. If it is a large one it may even be necessary to do some of the rough work on the previous day. The sooner you get through and out of the house, the better the people will like it.

Of course, if the decorations are for an evening affair I would not advise you to put the flowers in place until late in the afternoon.

Be sure you have with you what few tools you will need; also, some wire, string, strong pins and, if you expect to have to use it, a step ladder, so that you will not have to trouble the people in the house.

A good plan is to keep on hand one or more large sheets of strong cloth to lay on the floor. Set your plants on these until you are ready to arrange them. Keep all your stuff as much as possible in one place and try to finish up one part of the house at a time, so as not to have the whole house upset.

If you are left to yourself, so much the better, but should the lady of the house or, as is more often the case, some kind, well-meaning neighbor want to boss the job, you will have to keep smiling just the same, even if your ideas about decorating differ. Good taste is really a secondary consideration; the main thing is to please your customer, so that she will tell all her friends about your work. When working about the house be pleasant with everyone with whom you come in contact, but have your employees always keep in mind that they are not making a social call on the servants. Hugo Schroeter.

SUPPLYING LOCAL DEMAND.

In our admiration for the accomplishments of the trade specialists, we often lose sight of the man who caters to the local trade of a small town. He is deserving of more recognition than he usually gets, for a florist in such a situation must be an all-round specialist. He cannot concentrate his effort upon carnations, roses, sweet peas, violets, greens, or pot plants, but must do them all well enough to compare favorably with those produced by the specialists with whose products he frequently has to compete.

To those who are accustomed to the appearance of an acre of glass under one roof, devoted to one flower, the illustration on page 5 will be of interest. It shows one of the houses of T. G. Yale, at Wellington, O., and indicates the way in which both ends are made to meet, and lap over, by growing a little of everything for his home trade.

This picture was taken just before Memorial day and Mr. Yale says that business not only has been good this season but that for Memorial day it was much better than it ever had been before. As early as May 27 he had taken enough orders to have beaten last year's record had no more business come to him in the three busiest days of the month.

RETAILER AND WHOLESALER

CO-OPERATION.

[A paper by Arthur A. Niessen, secretary and treasurer of the Leo Niessen Co., read before the Florists' Club of Philadelphia, June 2, 1908.]

The full title of this paper is "Co-operation Between Wholesaler and Retailer in Times of Overproduction." Why "in Times of Overproduction" was added to the title is more than I can understand. If we cannot work hand in hand when the market is about evenly balanced between supply and demand, we certainly cannot expect to do so when the commission man is at the mercy of the retailer.

A Serious Problem.

We always have had, and will have, at certain times of the season a glut of some sort. This does not only apply to our trade, but to every other line as well. In our line it is due to unavoidable overproduction; in other lines, probably due to an overestimated demand. I would like to ask the retailers present, Are you doing anything, or are you making any effort whatever to relieve the market of its overproduction? Beyond finding fault with the manner in which the commission man is trying to meet this serious problem, the majority are doing nothing.

How to find a market for this overproduction is a problem worthy of a genius. It has been our experience that, although we offer flowers to the retailer at what would seem ridiculously low prices, he will not buy any more than he positively needs. The thought how he could handle this stock, and in some way increase his sales, never enters into the minds of the majority of them. I am quite sure, if the retailer were situated the same as the commission man during a glut, that if he had to take the stock regardless of having an immediate outlet for it, he would find ways and means to make it profitable for him to handle it. Necessity is the mother of invention, and it is wonderful what we can do when we must.

Feeling is Antagonistic.

It is very evident that to a certain degree the conditions of the market during a glut could be improved upon by coöperation, but in that direction progress seems extremely slow.

The feeling towards the commission man by many of the retailers is decidedly antagonistic. It is indeed surprising that by many retailers the commission man is considered a necessary evil, whose sole reason for existence is to oppress the retailer by extorting exorbitant prices and imposing all sorts of hardships. These retailers will without hesitation make the statement that they will favor the grower who peddles his stock. The commission man is called upon only during a scarcity, to supply that which the grower could not possibly supply. Coming to the commission man under such conditions, and being asked a fair price for the goods wanted, he assails the commission man for the seemingly unjust treatment, and he is classed with the pirates and daylight robbers. Just as soon as we can overcome the feeling of the retailer, as described above, towards the commission man, we are one point closer to coöperation.

Faker Will Take a Chance.

We cannot dispose of our surplus to the 5 and 10-cent stores; there is only one outlet left to us, and that is to put the flowers on the street. The street faker, by most retailers, is looked upon as a demoralizer of the flower business. The commission man is solely blamed for his existence, but let me tell you that with many of the growers who peddle their own stock, their last stopping place is the curb, and they will take anything to relieve the load on their arms and will sell their wares at a price so low that the buyer is pledged to secrecy. They are ashamed to have the price known.

Can you imagine what conditions would be if the growers were depending entirely on their own efforts to dispose of their products? Some of the fakers undoubtedly have what may be termed "nerve." A faker will buy 5,000 carnations that are almost asleep, take them on the sunny side of Market street, in a temperature of about 90 degrees, and take what he calls a chance. How many retailers, at the same price, would take the same chances?

I do not wish to be misunderstood, that I am here to speak for the faker. There is not a commission man who would not gladly dispense with him, if there were any possible way of doing so. With few exceptions, they are not a desirable lot.

Retailer Has First Chance.

When you see the street fairly flooded with flowers, you should always bear in mind the fact that the commission man has offered the stock to you first, that he has exhausted all the known science of salesmanship to induce you to buy it. Many retailers will advance the argument that if there were no flowers on the street they could sell double the stock they are using. That is the very thing they should do, buy it and keep it off the street. "Give us the same chances you give the street faker," is another time-worn saying. Let any of the retailers try it, and the results will startle them. Let them start out some morning and ask the commission man, "What will you take for the shelf?" and if you mean business the shelf is yours.

The tendency today is in just the opposite direction. Many of the retail stores may justly be called sample stores. They do not carry any stock; the commission man is carrying it for them. The demands are sometimes startling. Ten minutes after the goods are ordered they are supposed to be delivered. The excellent service brought about by live competition is sadly misused. In that direction coöperation would do much to overcome existing unpleasant conditions.

The commission man has, after years of persistent efforts, gained the confidence of the growers. They are working hand in hand; the grower will consult the commission man about his crops for a coming season, he seeks his advice, and the trade has benefited greatly by this "mutual interest" feeling existing between the grower and commission man. That feeling does not prevail as much between the retailers and commission man as it should.

Margin Between Prices.

There is one feature which in my estimation curtails the sale of flowers, and that is, many of the retailers do not keep their prices consistent with the prevailing wholesale prices. Beauties bought at $1.50 per dozen are sold at three and four times the purchase price. For illustration, I will cite an instance of a grower who entered a retail store and priced his own mignonette on sale there. He was informed that $3 per dozen was the price. He then wondered why he was getting only $6 per hundred for it.

To overcome a glut the retailers should aim to make large sales and small profits, instead of small sales and large profits. The ultimate results would be the same as far as profit is concerned, although a larger quantity of flowers has reached the consumer.

There is too vast a difference in the price of flowers from the grower to the public. We should aim to reduce the cost of handling the stock from the time it leaves the greenhouses until it reaches the public.

It seems some of the retail stores located on the main thoroughfares could dispose of large quantities of flowers by offering them at a reduced price. This they could do by eliminating all such expenses as deliveries of sales less than a certain amount, and by doing a cash business. This need not apply to all their trade, only to special sales, which may be called "bargain" for a certain day or time. The advertisement of bargains by the department stores is almost infallible bait to the public.

Meeting Department Store Competition.

A department store in a small town was selling carnations at 25 cents per dozen on Fridays and Saturdays. A retailer in the same town thought of meeting this price, and bought several thousand carnations to be put on sale the same days the department store was offering theirs. The retailer did this, not expecting to make a profit on the sales, but principally to meet the price of the department store. Making inquiry, he was offered carnations at $10 per thousand and he felt that he was being favored, but, to put it more correctly, he was doing the commission man a great favor in buying the carnations. Selling them at 25 cents per dozen, he disposed of as many as 5,000 on a Saturday. It is needless to say that beyond his expectation it turned out to be a very profitable business for him.

There are ways and means of selling large quantities of flowers, and surely our retailers are energetic and enterprising enough to find them without having someone in another line of business to show them how.

Ninety per cent of the public are lovers of flowers, and sixty per cent of them do not buy them because their means will not allow it. Why not, during a glut when flowers are cheap and plentiful, cater to the great masses and give them all an opportunity to enjoy the beauties of nature? That would cultivate a public taste for flowers. Many prospective buyers hesitate to enter your store, because they have only a small sum to spend. It is indeed a fact that by some retailers the 25-cent customer is considered a nuisance. That is a very sad mistake.

Special Sales.

Many retailers hesitate to reduce the prices of flowers for fear that they could not get a better price when the glut is over. They claim that their customers cannot understand why the prices of flowers should vary. I am sure we all know why the price of strawberries varies, and we know it simply because the public has been educated along those lines. Not many of us can afford them in January, but there is a time in the year when we can buy them, no matter how humble our circumstances may be. The same can be said about flowers; during a glut sell them at a price so that they may find their way into every home. But don't let the street faker do it for you.

Another feature which is good for the business is to run special sales. There is hardly a time in the year when some stock is not more plentiful than others, which can be bought cheap. Advertise. How many florists do it? Some of the small local papers would be a good advertising medium in certain sections. A "special sale" will bring the crowd, the people will get into the habit of frequenting your store, you are advertising your business.

Must Cater to the Masses.

In my estimation, the flower business today has reached such large proportions that the advancement of the trade can only be accomplished by catering to the great masses, and not so much to the few.

Coöperation properly applied is indeed a fine thing; in fact, it is only then practical when both or all parties concerned derive a benefit from their combined efforts. The definition of the word cooperation, according to Webster, is "to operate jointly to the same end." The end in this case is mutual benefit, and without that there is no coöperation. Through coöperation is brought about a combined effort, which is much greater than the individual effort. Everyone concerned derives from such a combination not a share of its strength and benefit, but all its force and good. If, in striving to advance our own position, we aim to advance that of the trade as well, we have true coöperation.

Unselfishness and Faith.

A man who toils solely for his own personal gain, who must make every transaction pay, regardless of the means to arrive at that point, is a menace to the trade in general. If each one of us would do a little something to better existing conditions, and do it with the feeling that the advancement of our profession is depending on our own individual effort, prompted by an unselfish interest, we would soon arrive at a better understanding, which would reap its own reward.

There is only one way that a man can help his trade, and that is by having faith in it, and confidence in those engaged in the same line of business. It is a terrible thing when we get so that we find fault with everything and everybody. We all know of some men who do this. There is not an honest man anywhere. That is all wrong. Ours is a good profession to the man who is trying to better it. If we all had our shoulders to the wheel, lifting with all our might, there would be no time to see who else is lifting. It is all depending on individual effort to produce one great force. I would advocate coöperation, not only during the time of an overproduction, but for every day in the year.

ASSESSMENTS ON STOCK.

Will you kindly let me know through the REVIEW if there is any taxation on plants in or out of the greenhouse? I noticed some time ago in the REVIEW that plants were not taxable and that assessment could not be enforced on same. Have you any decisions from any courts in regard to this matter? We have a smart farmer who happened to be appointed assessor by his farmer friend, and who of course knows it all, and who thinks that I must pay taxes on my stock of plants and business, and I call on your kindness to help me out with your valuable advice? L. A. G.

If L. A. G. lives in Ohio, he does not have to pay taxes on the crop of plants growing in his greenhouses. If that fool assessor is bound to put it on the tax list, go after his bondsmen, and also go to the auditor of your county at the proper time and have it taken off. The farmer does not pay taxes on the growing crop of corn, wheat or oats. On those grounds I always refuse to give in my crop and I have been sustained by our auditors here, in Auglaize county, Ohio.

J. J. Lawrence.

VINCENT IN EUROPE.

One of the Review's European correspondents sends the following:

R. Vincent, Jr., of White Marsh, Md., who has been touring in Europe for the last six or seven weeks, brought his trip to a close Saturday, May 23, and embarked for New York with his wife and two granddaughters. On the lookout for novelties in zonal and regal pelargoniums, he has visited the nurseries of the leading French and English hybridizers, and his stock will be augmented forthwith by the addition of the cream of the newest varieties found on the trip.

For ten days he was associated with a party of fifty British horticulturists on a trip to the bulb fields of Holland and the leading nurseries in Belgium for azaleas, palms and bay trees. In an after-dinner speech in Ghent he gave an entertaining and interesting account of horticulture in America. He eulogized the great Quinquennial Exhibition in Ghent, disappointing only on account of the meager show of geraniums—but then, Belgium has not taken up geranium culture and several Belgians would scarcely credit that it was possible to run geraniums as a profitable line.

He has looked up many old friends and made hosts of new ones in Belgium, Holland, France, England and Scotland. "Will ye no come back again?" if not always expressed in these words, at all events expressed the sentiments of many when the time for hand-shaking came around, and Mr. Vincent gave many promises that he would. Bee.

Smilax.

With the passing of Memorial day and the clearing of houses from bedding plants, we must not forget the little smilax plants which will now be impatient for a shift into the beds. As between benches and solid beds, the latter are far preferable for smilax culture. The soil you would use for chrysanthemums or carnations will suit them nicely. Houses which are not well adapted for the growing of cut flowers will answer for smilax, provided a temperature of 55 degrees in winter can be maintained. Put strings to the little plants as soon after planting as possible. If neglected too long, you will have a veritable jungle of shoots to disentangle.

While it is more profitable to replant smilax every year, it is sometimes grown in the same beds for two or more years. As the demand for strings will be light after the June wedding season ends, any beds which it is intended to carry over can then be kept on the dry side for a couple of months, later removing some of the old surface soil and giving a liberal top-dressing before starting them up. The planting of young smilax can be done as late as the middle of July, and we have seen plantings made in August do well.

Primulas.

The temperature during May was this season unusually high and, unless the necessary shade was given, the little seedlings of primulas and other plants may have sustained some injury. A coldframe is decidedly the best place for them for the next ten or twelve weeks. The sashes should be tilted both top and bottom all the time, and instead of whitewashing the glass heavily, as is too often done, use light lath shading, which can be rolled on and off the sashes according to the weather requirements. Primulas need shade, but a constant, heavy shade will make them soft and spindling. Using these removable shades means a little more work, but it also gives you far stockier and more satisfactory plants at the end of the season.

Answering several inquiries, we would say that it is now much too late to sow seed of Primula Sinensis or obconica. The seed does not germinate so well in summer as in winter and, under the most favorable conditions, the plants would be very small for winter sales. The first batch should now be in 3-inch pots and successional sowings have been transplanted into flats. Always use a good proportion of leaf-mold, with a smaller quantity of loam and sand, for the plants in the early stages, and do not allow careless hands to use the hose on them.

Cycas Revoluta.

Cycas revoluta takes up considerable space, but the fronds are valuable and the plants themselves make useful lawn specimens. Dry stems are now procurable and should be potted into as small sized pots as they can be squeezed into, then placed in a warm, moist house where they can be damped over once or twice a day. Sometimes they will start to grow in a month or six weeks, while occasionally they will remain dormant for six months.

Old plants, which you may not have space for in the houses, can be stood outdoors under the shade of trees, where, if they can be reached with the hose, they will make almost as good growths as under glass. In potting up the dry stems, use plenty of drainage and a compost of turfy loam, broken charcoal and sand.

Pruning Flower Shrubs.

Too often we still see what would be nice specimens of deciduous flowering shrubs trimmed each fall with an Italian garden precision sufficient to sicken the heart of any lover of trees and shrubs. The time to prune flowering shrubs is after they have done blooming. If this work is done earlier, much of the flowering wood will be cut away and the plants will present forlorn pictures.

The present is a suitable time to do any necessary trimming to the forsythias, spiræas, deutzias, loniceras, exochordas and other varieties which have passed out of bloom. Cut away the long shoots which contain little new growth, and all weak wood. Give every chance to the strong young growths coming from the base. In doing this pruning, contrive to leave the plants shapely. It is surprising the growth which they will make during the next few weeks. This summer pruning is too seldom done. If once tried, its advantages will speak forcibly another season.

Sowing Perennial Seeds.

Many of the hardy herbaceous plants may be readily increased from seeds at the present time. While aquilegias and delphiniums would have been more vigorous if sown in March, there is still ample time to secure good, stocky plants of each before fall. As between sowing the seeds outdoors and under glass, it is better to utilize a few of the vacant coldframes for this purpose. Outdoors the weather conditions are very uncertain and, with a long spell of dry weather, many of the little seedlings would probably perish and many never show above the surface. In a frame kept close and shaded until the seedlings appear, then more freely ventilated and finally with the sashes removed, success is certain.

In addition to perennials, a number of biennials may also be sown now with advantage. These latter include Campanula Medium or Canterbury bells, rockets, sweet-williams and foxgloves. Among herbaceous plants readily raised from seed are Pyrethrum roseum, useful for cutting in June; tritomas, stately and showy late fall perennials; Papaver orientale and nudicaule; Pentstemons barbatus Torreyi and Digitalis; lychnis, hibiscus, gypsophila, all the campanulas, anchusas, Alyssum saxatile, aubrietia and any of the hardy asters. Hollyhocks, Coreopsis grandiflora, Gaillardia grandiflora and the several lychnis need not be sown for a month yet.

Use light soil for these seeds and water through a fine rose. Lay mats over the sashes to prevent drying out until the seedlings appear. Advantage can be taken of showery spells to transplant the little seedlings into nursery rows. If transplanting is done when the ground is moist and the weather cloudy, the percentage of loss will be small.

Brief Reminders.

Lift tulips, narcissi and hyacinths to make room for bedding plants. Heel them thickly into partially shaded ground, lifting and storing them when the tops have died down. It does not pay to carry over hyacinths, and the early tulips do indifferently a second year. Narcissi, however, last well.

Get the benches ready for the single-stemmed mums and do not allow them to become hard before planting out. If your bench is not ready, it will be better to shift the mums into a size larger pots.

Now is the time to plan for painting, glazing and other repairs, rather than just before frost is due.

Disbud hardy roses. Remove Manetti or other sucker growths from budded stock. Use whale oil soap again if aphis continues to trouble them.

Cut the peony flowers early in the morning and place in deep jars of water in the cellar as soon as possible. If cut with the sun shining on them, they will last poorly.

Plant out any left-over azaleas or other hard-wooded plants you may still have standing around.

Plant out your own flower beds. Keep the lawn mowed and your approach neat. It will attract customers.

GERANIUM PAUL CRAMPEL.

The zonal geranium Paul Crampel is one of the best sorts in its class, useful either as a bedder or as a pot plant for Christmas sales. It is a Cannell variety, one of the English round-flowered section, decidedly preferable to doubles for Christmas sales. R. Vincent, Jr., & Sons Co., in its 1908 catalogue, gives a list of geraniums which it classes as "newer varieties of special merit." Of Paul Crampel it is said: "A magnificent single bedding variety that promises to supersede all other scarlets owing to its splendid habit and its ironclad constitution; dwarf and vigorous, close jointed grower; gigantic trusses; exceedingly free in bloom." Elsewhere in the catalogue it says, "After the introduction of that splendid bedding variety, Paul Crampel, one would be tempted to form an idea that a further improvement was well-nigh impossible."

W. N. Craig says Paul Crampel is "a magnificent bright scarlet, as good for bedding as for pot culture. It is a compact grower, dwarf and vigorous. Trusses are of immense size, and as brilliant in coloring as poinsettias. This unique sort should displace others of its color now in general use."

In flowering for Christmas, cuttings should be placed in 2-inch or 2½-inch pots during January or February, using a compost of sandy loam. Stand the pots quite close together, on a bench where a little bottom heat will reach them. Give a good soaking of water and let them become rather dry before watering again. Avoid syringings overhead, which are more harmful than beneficial. The plants need no shade whatever and ninety-five per cent should root. Shift to 4-inch pots when nicely rooted and later to 6-inch, where they may be flowered unless extra large plants are required, in which case a further shift to 8-inch may be given.

For the final pottings a compost of turfy loam and well rotted and dried cow manure, to which are added some sharp sand and a pinch of bone meal, is suitable. Pot quite firmly. The plants will need some pinching until the end of August, after which time, if desired for Christmas flowering, it can be discontinued. Experience has taught some growers that the plants do better kept under glass all the time, giving them a little shade in summer. In feeding avoid the use of too much liquid manure. It produces too rank and soft growth.

IN IOWA.

The establishment of E. Friederichsen & Sons, Wilton Junction, Ia., is typical of a large class in the trade. It is an especially important class this year, because of the fact that such places are enjoying just as much business as they ever had, with the opportunities for development only limited by the industry with which the proprietor pursues his work.

Friederichsen & Sons have about 12,000 feet of glass and grow a great variety of stock, for their business is exclusively retail and the many requirements of the people of a small, rural western community must all be met. Pot plants occupy as much space as cut flowers, the bedding trade being also a large feature. Good use is made of hotbeds as a means of increasing the production. Vegetables, as well as vegetable plants, are grown and there is outlet for all that is produced. Not only is this western country full of money as a result of several years of good crops, but competition is less keen than it is in the east and, if one person does not buy, it is always possible to push along until some one is found who will purchase.

THE RUFFLED GLADIOLUS.

A Coming Flower.

Referring to various articles commenting on my new strain of ruffled gladioli and its origin, since its announcement in the REVIEW of January 23, I wish to offer a few words of explanation in reply. As to its origin I cannot do better than repeat the history of its production as given by me in previous notes on this strain, namely: "About a dozen years ago I began selections with a view to crossing, in the hope of producing a frilled or ruffled gladiolus as beautifully formed as an azalea. I got the clue from observing in some varieties a tendency to vary somewhat from the regular or smooth petals.

"After many matings and failures I was at last rewarded about five years ago by the desired results. The first flower to show was an ideal cream in color, with a tint of blush and a strikingly marked red feather on three lower petals. One variety is white, and somewhat smaller in size of flower than the cream-colored sort. There are several shades of pink and yellow, also purples, in the varieties now under process of development, all beautifully ruffled."

From this it will be clearly seen that I have improved, by years of selection and crossing, a type of gladiolus which all who have seen pronounce a marvel of beauty and form and a great advance in this already remarkable flower. White Lady, America and other varieties have been used for a number of years, as well as one of the light colored species. There are at present over 50,000 seedlings of the ruffled stock in various stages of development.

Mr. Christie expresses an opinion that ruffled gladioli may be the result of sport variation or due to high culture. This may explain the appearance of some varieties, but does not account for the new strain reported by me, as with these, and with all of my seedlings, I always destroy their cormels until blooms have shown, in order to avoid as much as possible their appearance in other mixtures. By this method I am certain of their being original seedlings.

At no time in the creation of this new strain have I made use of any high culture or forcing to produce the object to be attained, as I was well aware that flowers so produced are more likely to rapidly deteriorate and be lost under ordinary or poor culture.

From the many complimentary letters and inquiries which I have received since the announcement of ruffled gladioli, I feel that their introduction will be very favorably received and highly appreciated by all lovers of the new and beautiful in the floral world. A. E. Kunderd.

JOSEPH HEACOCK.

When the market is in particularly bad shape, and the buyers demand the most unheard-of things, assuring you that your competitors will do all and more than they ask, and when you can't begin to do a tenth of these things and fill the hungry mouths that must be filled; then it is a pleasant thing to see someone who has weathered the turbulent business sea and secured positive results. In good, plain English, I mean that when things worry most, then I like to take a good long walk over to Wyncote, Pa., to see Joseph Heacock and his place.

I like to do this for several reasons. In the first place, a good walk has a calming effect, and makes difficult questions seem easy. In the second place, Mr. Heacock always has a cordial welcome ready, and should he chance to be out, the place is there, a place of about 80,000 feet of glass that typifies substantial business results. When I look at that place I feel that, though the market prices fluctuate, there is one man who believes that cut flowers can be grown and sold profitably for many years to come; when the plant market is dull, that there is one man at least who believes it will revive, and that his efforts to grow plants must not cease.

I hope that the illustrations on the following pages may encourage some Review readers in the way that the actual objects themselves have encouraged me. The interior of the office, of which a view is given, I have always thought one of the prettiest bits of work to be found among florists' business places. The open fireplace appeals to me especially. The shed, lately remodeled, is an excellent example of the healthy conditions that should prevail in our working quarters; plenty of room, plenty of light, plenty of air. The greenhouses are laid out with the aim of securing the most light, the greatest protection from the north wind and the highest economy of space. A pretty touch is shown in the third picture, where Mr. Heacock may be seen at his 100-foot hedge of Dorothy Perkins rose. Phil.

CARRYING ROSE PLANTS OVER.

Ripening the Wood.

To carry a house of roses successfully and profitably over a second season requires a deal of careful preparation and study. To make a success, we must begin the preparations early. Where the plants are in table benches, where the root action, water supply, etc., can be controlled and the plants ripened in a week or so, there is no need to hurry at this season, but where the plants are in solid benches it is well to begin early, as the work of ripening the wood requires a longer period.

Begin by gradually withholding water from the roots. In fact, if the syringe is kept going to keep down spider, that is all the water they will require. Spider must not be allowed to increase, as the full complement of leaves is required to complete the ripening process and any leaves allowed to become the prey of spider are a dead loss to the plants.

Air must be given freely, both night and day, as this is a great factor in hastening the ripening. The soil in the bench must not be allowed to become so dry as to cause the young wood to wilt or cause the plants to shed their leaves. It requires from three weeks to a month to complete the ripening process, even in the brightest kind of weather.

After the plants are ripe they should be carefully pruned, removing all the small and blind wood and cutting back the stronger growths to three or four eyes. Remove as much of the old soil as can be safely done without injuring the roots, and fill up with a good, rich mulch, to which has been added a generous sprinkling of bone meal. Ribes.

FROM POTS TO BENCH.

I have my roses in 3-inch pots. They are well filled and ready for a shift. Will it be all right to set them in their permanent bed, and what distance apart?

J. L. B.

Stock in 3-inch pots, ready for a shift, should either be shifted or planted. And, as this is the proper season for planting, if everything is in order for that operation the plants will do better in the benches than in pots.

The area which plants require depends entirely on the varieties grown. Brides, Golden Gate, Chatenay and varieties of similar growth require from 144 to 200 superficial inches. Beauties require more. Richmond can be well grown on one foot of space. Ribes.

BREEDING WILD ROSES.

[A paper by W. Van Fleet, Little Silver, N. J., read before the American Breeders' Association, continued from the Review of May 28.]

R. lævigata can be induced to form viable seeds with pollen of a considerable number of species and varieties, but our seedlings, even under careful greenhouse treatment, have not reached the blooming age, though many grow with considerable vigor for a year or two. R. Wichuraiana, pollinated with lævigata, has given a hardy and beautiful climbing rose with large, shining foliage, and enormous semi-double white blooms, yellow in bud. It is apparently a variety of much value. Seedlings of lævigata crossed with the best white teas and hybrid perpetuals are again under way, but are likely to perish as before. The only known commercial hybrid of the Cherokee rose is Anemone, with large single pink flowers. It is supposed to be a blend of lævigata with a tea rose.

Two Favorite Types.

R. multiflora has great promise as a breeder for garden roses. The type readily produces densely double blooms of good size, as a result of crossing with superior garden varieties. Crimson Rambler and others of the polyantha section are being widely used as seed or pollen parents and with excellent results. Multiflora x Persian yellow has produced with us a climbing variety having buds of flaming nasturtium scarlet, opening into yellow double blooms, which successively change to white and finally to pale rose.

R. Wichuraiana has leaped at one bound to a foremost position among rose species desirable for breeding. Thousands of hybrids have been raised in all rose-growing countries. Something like fifty-four named varieties of Wichuraiana and parentage had been put in commerce by the end of 1905, and others appear each season. Wichuraiana hybridizes so readily that it is scarcely possible to grow the species true from seeds, if other roses in the vicinity bloom at the same time. Its late season of flowering and facility of bud propagation are all that will save the type from disappearing under cultivation. It appears to readily blend with almost all species and varieties, the hybrid blooms largely taking on the characteristics of those of the pollen parent, while the plant retains much of Wichuraiana habit. Some of the most beautiful new garden roses owe their attractions to Wichuraiana influence. So far, however, the greatest success has been with direct or bi-specific hybrids. Attempts to grow secondary and dilute crosses, though very general, have not met with conspicuous success, the offsprings reverting or falling off in quality to a remarkable degree. There is widespread desire to produce continuous blooming roses of Wichuraiana character. This has seldom been accomplished by direct crossing, but many dwarf continuous blooming plants result from seeds of characteristic Wichuraiana hybrids, either self or cross fertilized. They are seldom of any value from a rosarian's standpoint.

The Most Promising of All.

R. rugosa is plainly the most hopeful species for breeding high class garden varieties. The hardiness, vigor and handsome foliage of the species and its immediate varieties, together with the great size and fragrance of the flowers and the long blooming season, at once place it beyond comparison. The work of amelioration has been found to be slow and difficult, though steady progress is made. More than one hundred hybrids and varieties have been introduced to general cultivation and scores of good ones are still in the hands of originators. Contrary to experience with Wichuraiana, the best results are gained in dilute rugosa crosses. It is necessary to remove two or more generations from the wild types to gain texture of petal and purity of coloring. This has been done in such superior varieties as Conrad Ferdinand Meyer, the result of a double cross represented by Gloire de Dijon x Duc de Rohan (hybrid perpetual) x rugosa Germanica, the last a hybrid between rugosa and a Provence rose. The blooms are perfect from the fancier's viewpoint and are most freely produced throughout summer, but the rugosa foliage has vanished. The writer has produced, by pollinating a selected double flowering hybrid rugosa with Victor Hugo, a plant of extreme rugosa character, with large, densely double blooms, scarlet-crimson in color, but of such fire and brilliancy that they even surpass those of its glowing pollen-parent. Other crosses of white rugosa on Clothilde Soupert, a tea-polyantha variety, resulted in the splendid continuous-blooming varieties, New Century, white, with blush center, and Sir Thomas Lipton, pure white, that are well worth growing in the most exclusive gardens. The possibilities of R. rugosa are slowly yielded, but will be of overwhelming value to future breeders.

Something should be said of R. spinosissima and R. lutea in their best garden forms. The Scotch rose and Harrison's Yellow both hybridize well with rugosa and have produced very attractive varieties. The writer has not succeeded so well when using Austrian Copper and Persian Yellow. Hopeful species for breeding that should be introduced in this country are R. gigantea, a large flowered climbing species, native of Burma, that has produced a superior variety in Portugal, by crossing with Gloire de Dijon; R. Hugonis, yellow-flowered, and R. Soulieana, with white flowers in corymbs, both native to western China.

THE FOUNDATION OF SUCCESS.

[A paper by B. T. Galloway, chief of the Bureau of Plant Industry, U. S. Department of Agriculture, read before the Horticultural Society of New York, continued from the Review of May 21 and 28.]

In connection with what has been said of spot, I may call attention to a simple experiment which shows how important it is to keep the plants surrounded by healthful conditions.

An Experiment With Spot.

Two bell-jars covering two plants show the manner in which the experiment is carried on. We can produce spot at will by spraying the foliage with water in which the spores or reproductive bodies have been placed. Now, if we spray the leaves of an ordinary plant out in the open and the plant soon dries off, there is no infection. If, however, we cover the plant with a bell-jar the air within this bell-jar becomes saturated and the leaves are covered with moisture. Within from thirty-six to forty-eight hours after such a plant has been sprayed with water containing the fungus spores, the minute spots begin to show; in two or three days more the spots are quite prominent; then if the bell-jar is removed a whitish appearance develops, indicating that the fungus has been checked by the drying off of the plant. Within another few days the plant is speckled and spotted with a beautiful case of the disease.

The foliage is now all trimmed off down to the base of the crown and a new set of leaves are allowed to grow. When these have fully formed, a second inoculation is made in the same way as before. The leaves are again cut off and allowed to grow and a third inoculation is made. The leaves are again cut off, but after this it will not be necessary to make any inoculation or even to cover the plants with the bell-jar, as the spores, always present within the house, will continue the inoculating process and the plant will become infected just as fast as the leaves appear. In other words, by this continued treatment, the plant has been weakened or it has been made to develop certain conditions which make infection constant. The same thing can be accomplished in a whole house of violet plants by improper treatment either through fumigation methods, watering, or improper ventilation.

Stem-rot.

The next disease to which attention should be called is one we have called stem-rot. This is the malady which usu-

DECORATION DAY.

The Decoration day reports vary greatly, but it is noted that there is everything to indicate that the demand for flowers for memorial purposes is still on the increase.

It is shown that the local retail business was good nearly everywhere that it did not rain May 30.

The farther west the reports so far received came from, the better the story was, the Mississippi valley having certainly the largest business ever experienced on Memorial day.

While wholesale markets in many cases were overstocked, the local trade in the small cities and country towns was greater than ever, practically throughout the country.

The principal dissatisfaction with the holiday business comes from unfavorable weather conditions. Unseasonably warm weather for the last half of May made stock of much lower quality than usual. All flowers were soft and shipped poorly. In the east retailers stocked up only to have heavy rain interfere with their sales.

But, on the whole, the quantity of flowers consumed May 30 was greater than it ever has been before and there is every reason to believe that with more favorable weather conditions in succeeding years the importance of this day in trade circles will continue on the increase.

It is worthy of special note that there was no extra demand for white and those who stored up white stock in anticipation of increased prices were sadly disappointed. There is no holiday at which there is an extra call for white flowers. They always should be marketed promptly when ready.

CREOSOTE IN GREENHOUSES.

I note in the Review of May 14 the remarks of Thomas H. White with regard to concrete slabs for bench bottoms. He concludes: "I should think it would pay to use the slabs even if wood supports were used, as the supports could be treated with some of the creosote preparations and would last a good many years. It is the bottom boards that need so much renewal."

I am specially interested in the reference to creosote, for I always have supposed that creosote, while a good preservative of wood, was injurious to plant life and that it could not safely be used about a greenhouse. I should like to hear, through the Review, from those whose experience gives them definite information on this subject. If there is any wood preservative that can be safely used, I think we all want to know about it.

In reply to the foregoing inquiry, regarding creosote in greenhouses, we would say that we have consulted some of the foremost chemists on this subject and they say that it is not safe to use creosote or similar preparations for preserving wood in greenhouses.

It is an accepted fact, known by everyone, that tar is injurious to plant life and none would think of using it. As creosote is a product of coal tar, and in view of the fact that it gives off an odor containing properties very similar to those thrown off by tar, we think it should be excluded from the greenhouse. Creosote is also made from wood and the principles of it are very similar to the principles of carbolic acid and tar oil.

There is no question but what creosote is a preservative of wood, for it has been tried all over the country in hundreds of ways. Blocks for street paving have been saturated with it, and also bridge timbers and railroad ties. For uses of this kind it is well adapted, but we hardly think that it would be advisable for the florist to use it in preserving lumber for benches. Creosote would not mix with water, nor would it affect the soil in the benches, but the odor is dangerous. What is true of creosote may also be said of all other wood preservatives which we have heard of. We say again that it should not be used for greenhouses.

John C. Moninger Co.

I have read the paragraph concerning the use of creosote in greenhouses with a great deal of interest. The Forest Service of the U. S. Department of Agriculture, up to the present time, has carried on no experiments in the preservative treatment of greenhouse construction timbers. Such work, however, is about to be undertaken in coöperation with S. Jacobs & Sons, Brooklyn, N. Y., manufacturers of greenhouses and horticultural buildings. It is probable that creosote, mercuric chloride and zinc chloride will be the preservatives employed. Creosote, on account of its nature, will probably be undesirable for use in most of the timbers, due to the fact that timbers so treated will not take a coat of white paint subsequently, which, I understand, is very desirable on account of the reflected light. In the benches, however, and in other portions of the buildings, where conditions of warm, damp air are at a maximum, and where painting is not necessary, creosote will probably prove to be the most efficient preservative.

From past experience in other countries it seems probable that neither creosote nor the antiseptic salts, if properly injected into the timber, will have any injurious effect upon the growing plants.

Memorial Day Market.

While it cannot be said that Memorial day trade surpassed that of its predecessors, there was a large volume of business transacted and, everything being considered, growers and retailers had no cause for complaint. The weather during the week was hot, averaging 80 to 85 degrees in the shade. This brought along a tremendous crop of roses and carnations and the advance in prices in both these lines was small. Roses, owing to the heat, were generally of inferior quality, excepting the better grades of Richmond and Killarney. There was little change in price, but better clearances were effected. Flowers selling at from $2 to $6 per hundred were in most request.

Carnations were brought in by the tens of thousands. The quality had deteriorated much with the high temperature and prices ruled much lower than a year ago. The quality also was inferior on the whole. Prices varied all the way from $2 to $5, colored sorts, of course, selling the best. Whites were inclined to be druggy. Sweet peas varied all the way from 25 cents to $1.25 per hundred. Stems on these are getting short compared with those seen at Easter.

Quite a few gladioli were seen and found ready purchasers. There was also a good supply of lilies, mostly longiflorums. Lily of the valley from outdoors was abundant and the best of it was much superior to the average forced product. Little Dutch bulbous stock was seen, the heat having been too much for them. With the exception of some of the Darwin and other late tulips and the double white gardenia-scented narcissus, this class was unrepresented. Of white candytuft, stocks in various colors, snapdragons, Spiræa Japonica and marguerites, there was a heavy supply, most of these being sold in bunches. Lilac was on the wane to a large extent, but fresh samples sold well, as did sprays of Deutzia Lemoinei and D. gracilis, viburnums and Spiræa Van Houttei. A few peonies were seen, chiefly the old double crimson, and quite a few German iris.

Office of the Joseph Heacock Co., Wyncote, Pa.

Memorial day weather was far from ideal. The humidity was excessive, the sun failed to show itself and heavy showers fell at intervals, ending in a veritable downpour and gale towards evening.

The volume of business done in outlying cities and towns seems to have been fully equal to that of a year ago, some growers selling more than ever before. In addition to cut flowers, there was quite an active call for bedding plants of all the more popular kinds.

Business since Memorial day has been quiet. Flowers, owing to continued hot weather, are of indifferent quality. The numerous weddings scheduled to take place, as well as school graduations, will call for a considerable amount of material for the next three weeks. Quite a few single peonies are coming in and some doubles are also seen. These are fully two weeks earlier than in 1907. From present indications Jacq roses from the open will be available within a week. There is a fair call for lily of the valley. Some of the frame and outdoor-grown stock is of splendid quality. Among roses, Kaiserin is assuming the lead. Not many Carnot are yet seen. Fair Maid sells well among carnations. This is still favored by some as a profitable summer variety.

Various Notes.

From present indications there will be a fine show of rhododendrons at Horticultural hall June 6 and 7. Other features will be iris, wistarias, orchids, herbaceous flowers in variety and azaleas.

The estate of Prof. C. S. Sargent at Holm Lea, Brookline, will be utilized for a big charity fete June 6. The magnificent collections of azaleas, rhododendrons, wistarias and other seasonable flowers will be at their best and an attendance of many thousands is expected. The 200 acres of beautifully laid out grounds are in themselves an irresistible attraction for an army of flower lovers.

S. J. Goddard had the heaviest Memorial day trade since he started business, his home trade being specially good.

Reports from the several seed stores are that business has averaged up well as compared with previous years. Owing to the warmer season, there are fewer reports of seeds failing to germinate.

John McFarland, of North Easton, had an extra fine lot of valley and stocks for Memorial day.

A. Roper is, as usual, bringing in quantities of extra good Fair Maid carnations. This variety was introduced by Mr. Roper and has always proved a popular and profitable summer sort around Boston.

J. T. Butterworth had a splendid lot of cattleyas right for Memorial day, also his usual fine lot of lily of the valley.

Thanks to the unusual mildness of the winter, there is this season the finest display of rhododendrons seen for many years on many estates in and around Boston. Even some kinds of doubtful hardiness are blooming profusely. In both the Arnold arboretum and park system there is a beautiful show of these handsome shrubs at present.

E. J. Shaylor has tendered an invitation to the garden committee of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society to visit and inspect his extensive collection of peonies in a few days. Mr. Shaylor has a magnificent collection, gathered from all the best European sources, at his nursery in Wellesley Hills.

DETROIT.

The Market.

We have been having a variety of weather the last few weeks, with hot predominating.

Decoration day business was satisfactory to all concerned. The sale of plants for the cemeteries was about the same as in previous years. There was a big demand for all kinds of cut flowers, cleaning up the market. The local commission houses report a big shipping business, far exceeding that of last year.

The market was well cleaned up last week, but a spell of warm weather has again been getting in its work; consequently there is an abundance of stock on hand at the present writing.

The opening of the beautiful new building of the Detroit City Gas Co., the new offices of the First National Bank in the Ford sky-scraper, and the reception on the new D. & C. boat, the City of Cleveland, all called for a lot of stock. Many baskets of flowers and plants were used, also many hundred Beauties and other roses. All of the large stores had their share of this work.

Various Notes.

This has been an exceptionally fine season for shrubbery of all kinds. The season was about two weeks in advance of former years, due to considerable warm rain in the early part of spring. White and lavender lilac, honeysuckle, Spiræa Van Houttei, etc., were never seen better. There was an unusually big demand for small boxwoods.

Some of the downtown stores had pretty windows for Memorial day. Sullivan had a well made flag as a background. Breitmeyer had the largest windows draped with large American flags. Schroeter's window was laid out to represent a lot in a cemetery, with flower bed, grave, etc. H. S.

IONIA, MICH.—Decoration day trade was a record breaker. Everything with a "posy" on it was cleaned out. Both M. Wetterling and D. L. Vincent had an excellent stock of geraniums, etc. M. Wetterling had some exceptionally fine roses in pots, some of them with twelve to fifteen flowers and buds.

LABOR is much more abundant this season than it was a year ago, either the unskilled variety or the experienced grower.

WHEN a business man has a reputation as a "good collector" he at once becomes known in his community as prompt pay, prosperous and progressive.

THE REVIEW will be pleased to hear from anyone who would like to contribute periodical news letters from any city where there is not already a correspondent.

THE bedding-out trade is no less than it was last year. In the height of the season everyone who makes a specialty of this class of work always has all he can do.

THE salvia requires much sun for its best development, but will produce bloom quite well in partial shade, though plants and flowers will both be smaller under such conditions.

GLASS factories are closing early this year, because of low prices, high wages and an unprofitable market. The probabilities are that glass will be no cheaper this season and that, on the other hand, prices may rise.

AS happens nearly every spring, just before Memorial day there was a strong demand for geraniums in flower, the bedding out having used up all such stock, while later in the season there may be a surplus because of the stock which was not ready at the time wanted. A geranium must be in flower at the date bedding is done to be salable.

The sixth annual meeting of the American Peony Society will be held June 19 and 20, 1908, at the State College of Agriculture, Cornell University, Ithaca, N. Y. A. H. FEWKES, Sec'y.

AMERICAN ROSE SOCIETY.

The rose show of the American Rose Society and the Horticultural Society of New York will be held at Bronx park, New York, Wednesday and Thursday, June 10 and 11.

AMERICAN CARNATION SOCIETY

A. E. Boyce, Wellsville, N. Y., registers Carnation Claribel Worth, Estelle x Maceo; color, scarlet crimson, very rich; size of flower, average three and a quarter inches; at its best about Christmas; good stems, non-bursting calyx; foliage, rich blue; resistant to disease and insects.

The Wa-no-ka Greenhouses, Barneveld, N. Y., registers Carnation Apple Blossom, a cross of Enchantress on a white seedling; color, white, delicately blended with pink; size of flower, average three and one-quarter inches through season; habit, rapid, upright grower, all growth coming from the base; good producer and good keeper on long, stiff stems.

ALBERT M. HERR, Sec'y.

GOOD CROP PROSPECT.

Dispatches indicate that the crops are making good progress, although planting is still retarded at some points by rain. This factor and low temperature in other sections tend to make the crops late, but as yet there is no evidence of curtailed output. About the customary area of cotton land will have to be replanted because of floods, adding to the cost of the crop, but not necessarily reducing the yield. Most reports indicate that cotton is growing well. Both winter and spring wheat states report favorable progress and harvesting will soon begin in the early districts. There is less complaint of insects than at this time last year. Corn planting is being pushed rapidly, but excessive moisture retards progress at some points and the growth is backward on the whole.

Many states report great improvement as to the rainy weather, and as the ground dries there is especial pressure to get the crop under way, owing to the attractive prices prevailing. Oats and hay are in excellent condition, present prospects promising large yields of both, and the leading fruit crops are doing nicely.

The Great Central Market.

Probably the most notable thing about the Decoration day business was the almost exact duplication of last year's splendid results in money value of sales, with conditions as radically different from last year's as it is possible to imagine.

The big days were Thursday and Friday, and while some houses did less on these days than on the corresponding days last year, a number of wholesalers report some little increase in the total of sales, so that the result for these days was probably as good as last year. But the record for the week does not make so satisfactory a showing. Last year stock was exceedingly scarce and high in price and a big business was done every day in the week. This year stock was overabundant and the early days of the week were decidedly dull, which cut down the week's record, as compared with last year.

Considering the entire week, it is probably a conservative estimate to say that fifty per cent more flowers realized ten per cent less money than in the week in which Decoration day fell last year.

The volume of business certainly was something tremendous. Several houses say they shipped more boxes of flowers

May 28 than on any other day in their history. It is a decidedly conservative estimate to say that the quantity of flowers handled this day was only half again as large as the quantity handled the second day before Decoration day last year. Some wholesalers say they handled double the quantity, and it is doubtless the fact that the market handled more flowers on that day than in any other twenty-four hours since Chicago became "the great central market."

Friday was not nearly so heavy a day as Thursday—about two-thirds the volume of business is the general estimate. Saturday morning there was a lively local demand and some shipping, but many houses closed at noon. Others say they found enough to keep all hands busy up to the usual closing time, and there was good business Sunday morning.

After the rush was over it was found the market was fairly well cleaned out, as thoroughly as could be expected with the enormous volume of receipts. The growers had made the usual mistake of storing up white carnations in anticipation of an extra demand. This never now develops at a holiday, and, as at Easter, there were white carnations which had to be dumped when they had stood in the wholesale house the limit of their endurance, which, in many cases, was not long.

The anticipated shortage of peonies developed into the opposite condition; there were so many fresh arrivals that there was little occasion for sending to the cold storage houses for the quantities of indifferent stock put away from the southern crop. First-class peonies held their prices because, as usually is the case, a large part of the stock was of unsatisfactory quality. But there were such immense quantities of the second and lower grade peonies that the poorer stock realized exceedingly low prices and not all were sold. A great deal of the stock in the freezer will be a total loss.

Roses cleaned up better than had been expected, there being only small quantities of short-stemmed stock left. There has been no Decoration day in recent years when the quality of all stock has been so low. The weather was decidedly unfavorable. Carnations were soft and the whites, especially, perished in a few hours. Neither roses nor peonies were of the quality usually sent out from this market and many complaints will inevitably result. Buyers should bear in mind that the wholesaler cannot ship any better stock than the weather permits. As a rule, wholesalers went to much trouble to pick out the best stock possible for all shipping orders. So poor was the average quality that there was strong demand for the little really good material. Good carnations, especially the colored sorts, were in strong demand. Enchantress, in a measure, shared the fate of the white. Red roses sold better than any other color.

The cape jasmine placed in cold storage proved practically a total loss. On coming out of the freezer they promptly turned yellow and, in some cases, did not realize storage charges. There were practically no fresh capes, the crop having been too early in Texas.

Sweet peas, lilies, valley, gladioli and miscellaneous items sold about as they usually do. There was no advance in price and no special demand. Those who had expected a large increase in the call for green goods were disappointed. The month has been a bad one for the specialists in this line.

Since Memorial day there has been fair business on certain specialties, such as are wanted for weddings and other seasonable work. The houses that are shy on this class of stock complain of dull trade.

The Weather in May.

The average grower may be inclined to dispute it, but the weather professor in the dome of the post-office avers that there were eight clear days in May. There were eleven partly cloudy, and twelve on which the sun did not shine. It got to be as warm as 87 degrees in the weather man's office May 25, and there were four other days 80 degrees or above. The rainfall was 6.74, or practically twice as much as the average.

The May Business.

It is unfair to compare the May business with that of last year. May of 1907 was an exceptional month, a period of cold weather, no outdoor flowers, brisk demand and high prices for greenhouse crop. It is no wonder that May of this year does not compare favorably with it. Go back another year and this May does not seem so bad. In fact, had it not been for the interminable rains there would have been nothing to complain of, even compared with last year.

Shipping was good, but local demand was poor throughout the month. Stock was in large supply and it rained so frequently that the retailers had little transient trade and the outdoor salesmen were day after day prevented from plying their vocation. The result was extremely low values for stock.

tained all along, that the state of the market this spring is due to other causes than the so-called hard times. He says he believes the flower business has been less affected as a consequence of last fall's financial upheaval, than almost any line of merchandising.

Mr. Amling points out that, while the wholesalers did not do quite as much business, as measured by money value, last week as in the same week a year ago, the retailers must have done much more than they did last year, because disposition was made of a vast quantity of stock, a much greater quantity than was sold last year. All this found its way to the public through one channel or another. Mr. Amling says he believes retail prices were not specially lower than last year and that the public must therefore have spent a much larger sum for flowers than it did for Memorial day in 1907.

Various Notes.

The Republican national convention will be held in Chicago June 16 and the following days. It will crowd the city and will doubtless bring some extra business to the Hauswirth store and others similarly located, but, as a general proposition, such events interfere with and reduce the general run of business. It appears that the more excitement there is the less thought people give to buying flowers.

Weiland & Risch expect to plant their new range at Evanston by June 15. They are making rapid progress.

W. E. Lynch, at E. H. Hunt's, says the Decoration day business was the best they ever had, in spite of the low prices.

Phil Schupp says that J. A. Budlong's receipts of carnations last week were approximately 90,000.

On the evening of Friday, May 29, in the midst of a heavy rain, thieves with a horse and wagon burglarized one of Peter Reinberg's storage rooms and carried off at least a thousand roses. It is thought they were looking for the day's cut of Mrs. Field but failed to find it, as it had already been sold, and took Richmond instead!

The A. L. Randall Co. reports that May 28 and 29 were considerably the largest days in its history in quantity of stock handled, exceeding last year in the money value of sales for those two days, but the rest of the week fell below last year.

Wietor Bros. say that, judging from their business in mum cuttings, there should be plenty of stock in the autumn, and many buyers do not order until the stock is in 2-inch pots, which will not be until the middle of June.

One grower, who did not ship heavily and said carnation crops were going off, managed to send in 52,000 May 28 and 29. Many of them were white and would have realized more money if sent in when ready.

The E. F. Winterson Co. reports a fair season in its seed department, and a splendid plant business in the last fortnight. The seed business is about over, but they expect to do something with plants all through June.

Vaughan & Sperry, who are located in the Flower Growers' market, say their experience was the reverse of that of most of the houses, in that May 29 with them was a considerably heavier day than May 28.

George Walther, on Sixty-third street, reports an excellent Memorial day busi-

Percy Jones says that someone ought to come around the market selling diaries with an admonition not to save up white stock printed over the days just before each holiday; every wholesaler would buy enough books to give each grower one.

George Nixon, formerly running the flower department at the Fair, has succeeded to the business of George Harris at Pittsburg.

Bassett & Washburn say that if June continues as well as it started off, they will be well pleased, Monday and Tuesday of this week having been with them better than the same days last year.

J. A. Budlong will handle the peonies cut at the Peterson Nursery this year. It will be the first time this stock has come into the wholesale market, and it will be a big item.

John J. Kruchten says Decoration day was the best holiday he yet has had, especially on shipping orders.

Floods in the southwest made more or less trouble in the last week. A number of Decoration day shipments for Texas and Oklahoma points could not be sent through and were sold by the express companies at Kansas City. As late as Tuesday, June 2, the Wells Fargo was refusing shipments to certain southwestern points.

E. E. Pieser says that the unfavorable weather cost Kennicott Bros. Co. a great deal of business, through the cancellation of peony orders booked some time before Decoration day.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

In the last three days of the last week business was reported as satisfactory. Decoration day, on Saturday, cleaned up the wholesale houses of all their consignments, and the store men in all parts of the city report an extra good demand, much better than last year. Stock at the wholesale markets was not as plentiful as early in the week. During the last three days consignments became light and the business better. The St. Louis wholesale markets are unfortunate in this respect on holidays, as most of the shippers use up their stock for their home trade.

Monday, June 1, little stock came in. That which came was disposed of in short order, and clean-up sales can be reported for the first day of this month. Let us hope it will continue so during the month, because after that the summer dullness will set in and the florist can take his vacation.

he can do in planting out this spring. The long, rainy spell delayed him much of the time.

Mrs. M. S. Vesey, of Fort Wayne, Ind., spent Monday, May 25, in this city, visiting the trade.

Henry Emmons, of Belleville, Ill., and Edwin Denker, of St. Charles, Mo., were in the city Friday, May 29, buying stock for Decoration day orders. Both report good trade.

William Smith and Charles Schoenle, in company with John Burke, spent a day the last week looking up suitable grounds for the Florists' Club's outing next month.

Henry Ostertag is happy now that the new coliseum is being built near his place of business, from which he expects to derive much business when finished. A number of orders for June weddings, he says, will keep him busy this month. When it comes to hustling, few excel him in the trade here.

While Park Commissioner Scanlan is away on his honeymoon trip, the department is having its troubles with an order issued by the commissioner before he left, that no picnics can be held in Forest park, and women and children are up in arms about it. Still the mayor, in a statement, seems to uphold the order.

The Michel Plant & Bulb Co. advertised an auction sale for Wednesday of this week, to sell its surplus stock in geraniums and alternantheras; 10,000 of each were to be sold.

Next Sunday, June 7, will be the first Sunday opening of the year at Shaw's garden. Everything will be in shape by that time to receive the large crowds, should the weather be fine. Superintendent Irish says that the delay in planting out, caused by too much rain, has been made up and everything will be in readiness for the first Sunday opening. Messrs. Pring, Thompson and Sulgraf are all hustling to have their departments in shape for the opening days.

"Red" Schriefer, of Kuehn's, and Fred Alves, of Angermueller's, will be the wholesalers' battery for the baseball game between them and the retailers at the Florists' Club outing next month. The retailers have not as yet announced their battery, but it may be Oscar Hurtlemann and Herman Weber.

The Bentzen Floral Co. had a busy week in all lines of the trade. Friday, May 29, they disposed of 1,000 cut roses to the Yeatman school children, a few at a time, by noon. Mr. Bentzen reports that the busy planting season will be at an end by next week, so he can attend to the secretary's duties at the club meeting.

Frank Weber, of H. J. Weber & Son's Nursery Co., reports that they had the decorations for the Southeast Missouri Drummers' Association meeting at St. Genevieve, Mo., May 26. The large arch erected by them, made of flowers, was greatly admired by the large crowd that was in attendance.

All four wholesale houses did a rushing trade Friday and Saturday, filling Decoration day orders. They all closed half a day Saturday, May 30, allowing their employees a half day off.

Great quantities of extra fine sweet peas are coming in from Kirkwood growers each morning to our wholesale houses. Winter, Ude, Jr.; Pilcher, Scheidegger, Gross and others will soon be flooding the market with them. The stock sold well for Decoration day.

The St. Louis Florists' Club will hold its regular monthly meeting next Thursday afternoon, June 11, at 2 o'clock, in Bowman's hall, 1023 Locust street. The trustees will report on the different proposed sites for the club's annual outing and a vote will be taken on which to select. Other important matters from last meeting will come up and should attract a large attendance. J. J. B.

TO THE TRADE

Less than four years ago I built two small greenhouses, as a venture into the florists' world. My twelve greenhouses, located at my home in New Cumberland, Pa., the two stores in Harrisburg, Pa., one at 35 North Second St., the other at 1108 Market St., and the store at 159 South St., Steelton, Pa., are proof to me that the key to success is carefully looking after the wants of one's patrons, by giving both wholesaler and retailer only the best that can be grown and never allowing anyone to be dissatisfied.

Having recently added seed departments to each of my stores, I am now in shape to take care of my trade in the most satisfactory manner and promise to give the same careful attention to all in the future as in the past.

With thanks for past patronage, I am, for pleasure and profit,

Very truly yours,

The Market.

Decoration day, which promised such excellent business, was turned into a disappointment by the flood, over two inches of rain falling in the afternoon. The loss to the business must have reached into the thousands of dollars, for the retailers had not sold any considerable part of the immense purchases made Friday and early Saturday in anticipation of what promised to be an extraordinary demand. Sunday brought perfect weather, but the necessity for flowers had largely passed.

The wholesale market was never in such shape to meet any prospective or possible demand. Shipments the last of the week were enormous and prices realized were better than through the depressed conditions the early part of the week. But Monday of this week saw a return to the heavy shipments of all varieties of cut flowers, and even the June weddings had not begun to make their influence felt, though their number must have some effect as the month progresses.

Beauties are coming in by thousands to all the leading wholesalers and few go above $10 per hundred. To obtain any large selection of the best is no easy task, out of a complete shipment ten per cent of the total being a high average. This applies to all roses now arriving, boxes of all grades being secured by the buyers far below the quoted prices.

Orchids are abundant and prices last week were far from satisfactory. The weddings and out-of-town demand should raise them during the coming weeks. The variety and quality are quite equal to any this season.

Great stocks of peonies are here, many of them imperfect. For the best, especially the red ones, there is a wide call and prices hold at $1 a dozen. The large white and pink varieties go readily at these figures, and sometimes higher. Many will be used in church decorations. Lilies and valley have not advanced. A good demand for wild smilax is evident. Carnations still come in floods, 10,000 to 20,000 daily at some of the larger wholesale stores in a single shipment. Imagine the quantity when all the carnation growers in and around New York have completed their cutting for the day.

Ladies' Night.

Ladies' night, last Wednesday, May 27, at the rooms of the New York Florists' Club, was a great success. The result was largely due to the splendid energy and management of Chairman Will Rickards, who has proved himself a worthy successor to the veteran, John B. Nugent. His corps of lieutenants did valiant service and are all ladies' men of past or present reputation: Messrs. Fenrich, Duggan, Joseph Manda and Bobby Schultz. There were nearly 200 guests and members present, and the beautiful rooms of the club never held a better pleased or more charming gathering.

Mazetti catered satisfactorily and everybody was delighted, notwithstanding the hottest night of the year. The program was worthy of the occasion and showed the master hand of theatrical management, at which Mr. Rickards is no spring chicken. The artists were all commendable, the entertainment unique and interesting. President Weathered made the speech of welcome; soprano solos by Miss Brown, tenor solos by Mr. Mullen, violin solos by Mr. Kreshover, imitations of Harry Louder by Master Robert Young, singing by Baby Eleanor, fancy dancing by Baby Lanning, bagpipe music by Sergeant Cameron and dancing by Robert Young and the Misses Cameron, Sorlie and Birnie made up a program of rare excellence that kept the big crowd intact until nearly midnight.

In many respects it was the most enjoyable evening the club has ever furnished its friends, and a fitting precursor of the club's outing July 1.

Harry Bunyard, just home from his southern outing, carried Baby Lanning on his shoulders around the hall to the plaudits of her enthusiastic admirers.

Next Week's Program.

Next week is full of horticulture. Monday evening, June 8, the New York Florists' Club's summer meeting, and the last before September, takes place at the Grand Opera House building. A peony exhibit is expected and the outing program will be distributed. The hour of meeting is 7:30.

On Wednesday, June 10, the Nassau County Horticultural Society will have its annual meeting and exhibition at Glen Cove, L. I.

On the same day and Thursday, June 10 and 11, the American Rose Society and the Horticultural Society of New York will hold their joint exhibition at Bronx park and, although the days chosen will not draw the general public, a large attendance of horticulturists is anticipated.

On the same dates several of the nurserymen in and around New York will journey to the annual convention of the American Association at Milwaukee, so that altogether it will be a strenuous floricultural and horticultural week, with events of far-reaching importance to the general trade.

Brooklyn Retailers Organize.

The Brooklyn Retail Florists' Association has been organized with fifty members. The officers are as follows: President, Robert Wilson; treasurer, Joseph Mallon; secretary, J. V. Phillips. Weekly meetings will be held and it is hoped to do much for the advancement of the trade in Brooklyn.

Various Notes.

George Saltford is greatly delighted with his new quarters on Twenty-eighth street and tells me he has already added ten new growers to his staff. The store is a model of convenience and the new occupant knows how to grow more than violets.

H. E. Smith, of Hazleton, Pa., has sold his store at 50 West Twenty-ninth street to James Blauvelt, who will continue it as a wholesale and retail center as usual. Mr. Blauvelt has had many years' experience in both departments.

E. G. Hill passed through New York last week on his way to Gay Paree, where, as a learned judge, he will make decisions at the international rose show now in progress. Mr. Hill should bring to the convention the result of his latest observations of the new fashions in London, where real flowers have become the fashionable fad, after their use last season as a novelty, and where flower ruffles, theater muffs, flower boas and fans made of real blossoms are seen. Straw hats are said to be trimmed with wreaths of roses, violets and wallflowers and florists there have standing orders to furnish the fragile hat trimmings every morning as regularly as flowers for the dinner table.

F. H. Traendly, of Traendly & Schenck, says he hears some Pennsylvania wholesale florists are shipping cut flowers direct to prominent retailers in New York with the understanding that they pay for what they sell. This would be a new departure with a vengeance. There must be some fire where smoke is detected by an accomplished fireman.

John Scott's lieutenant at Flatbush, David McKenzie, will spend his holiday at his old home in Scotland.

Joseph Leikens has a fine new store at Fifth avenue and Fifty-fourth street, the old Hodgson headquarters, and has carried his Thirty-third street smile up with him. He has a fine opportunity here for striking window work. His Belmont hotel store is a success and he opens as usual this month in Newport, R. I.

A. M. Henshaw is entertaining his sister and Mr. Britton, from England.

Messrs. Farquhar and Welch, of Boston, and Peter Bisset, of Washington, were recent visitors in New York.

The early closing movement has begun. The New York Cut Flower Co., in the Coogan building, started its 3 p. m. lock-up June 1. Many other wholesalers will join in this wise and generous decision, and later on it will be 1 p. m. with the majority.

The auction sales continue daily and semi-weekly with prolonged success and will last well into June.

Alex McConnell is back at his desk again. He sent some elaborate floral work to Cincinnati last week, filling a car. Mr. Scott, his New York lieutenant, accompanied them. Mr. and Mrs. Scott will enjoy their summer vacation in Europe in July.

All the seedsmen are still busy with shipments and suburbanites. The season has been a remarkable one, with little hot weather, abundance of rain and larger plantings than ever known before. With seasonable weather now, there is the promise of a phenomenal harvest.

Half a million kentia seeds is going some, but this is but one of many such goings on at A. T. Boddington's, where importations of everything have been double those of any other season in his history.

F. W. O. Schmitz, of Prince Bay, N. Y., has just received his annual importation of cycas, an extra large shipment this season and in fine condition on arrival.

Wertheimer Bros. were more than satisfied with advance sales for Decoration day.

Ford Bros. claim still the largest icebox in the wholesale section, and there are a lot of competitors. It needs one as large as a house to accommodate some of the carnation shipments lately arriving.

W. H. Kuebler, the Brooklyn wholesaler, sails next week for a health trip to Sweden and Germany.

Ralph Armstrong, manager of Wadley & Smythe's New York store, is rejoicing over the arrival of a baby girl. The firm's Newport branch opened June 1.

Mrs. H. H. Berger and Miss Berger are on a European trip.

H. Zuzuki left Monday for Japan via Seattle. He will call at Chicago and St. Paul and be in Yokohama June 25. He has been away from home over three months.

Charles Kakuda starts shortly for a southern trip in the interests of the Yokohama Nursery Co. His place as foreman for the Hinode Co. is taken by August Kratt, formerly with Cassidy and John Donaldson.

The Market.

We can all afford to feel well satisfied with the business done for Decoration day. The weather turned out to be ideal and the quantity of flowers used this year for the decoration of the graves was enormous. Many florists were dubious as to how the business would be, owing to the great quantities of outdoor flowers which were right in it. The quantity of this class of flowers used is simply beyond estimation. But the very fact that flowers were so plentiful seemed to act as an incentive to buy, in the case of those who were not so fortunate as to have an abundance in their own yards; for buy they did and, though the wholesale houses handled large quantities of flowers, they were entirely cleaned out Friday night. Saturday brought a large supply again, and by noon, when the business was over, the greater portion of that had been disposed of.

There were plenty of flowers to fill all orders, with the exception of carnations. This flower was scarce, and many more could have been sold. Peonies were in large supply and everyone could get all he wanted of them. The price ranged from 2 cents to 4 cents. Roses of the best grade sold out well and at good prices, but there were a great lot of them which were sold at job lot prices.

So, when we take all things into consideration, we can feel pleased with the business this year, for it was certainly good, and when we take into consideration the general business situation and the way our business has been going from the first of the year, we have every reason to be well satisfied.

Various Notes.

E. G. Gillett did a large shipping business in peonies, handling many thousands of this flower.

The J. M. McCullough's Sons Co. reports satisfactory business, as do William Murphy, L. H. Kyrk and C. E. Critchell.

Weiland & Olinger handled an immense quantity of flowers and sold out clean.

quite a farm, devoting considerable space to outdoor flowers. Peonies occupy the most space, but he also has large beds devoted to Japanese iris, gladioli and asters. In some of his ponds he has started pond lilies in various colors. With this combination, together with quite a good acreage of peaches, he manages to make things go nicely.

The retailers also report good business, and that prices were good, in spite of the large quantity of outdoor flowers. This point in itself shows how great the demand was.

DAYTON, OHIO.

State of Trade.

Decoration day for 1908 is now a thing of the past, and our florists, who during the last few weeks worked like Trojans, are getting a little more rest. Each of our florists had his own liberal share of business, but some of them report that it was not quite so good as last year's trade, as the hot weather brought the peonies in through the country, and last year the weather was cool and outdoor flowers did not come in so soon. Consequently, this season, the street market of Friday afternoon was filled with tubs of peonies, brought in by the market gardeners, but the hot sun which poured down on them brought them out in full bloom, and some of their purchasers found nothing but empty stems when they went to get their Decoration day bouquet. So, in this event, they had to make an early call on the florist Decoration day morning, in order to have the graves decorated as they desired.

In looking through our greenhouses now, one will not see many bedding plants—merely a few crippled stragglers that have been picked up and set down by more than one customer, but upon taking a look about the parks and the city in general, one can see where the flowers have all gone, for the citizens of Dayton take great pride in the appearance of their lawns.

The weather in the last few days has cooled off to such an extent that an overcoat feels just about right. These conditions are greatly appreciated by the florist who has to work under the glass, and it is also a good thing for cut flowers, as the past hot weather had commenced to play havoc with the roses, and our florists, of course, want the best roses obtainable for the coming June weddings.

Carnations are quite plentiful, but small, and have dropped from 4 cents and 5 cents to 2 cents since Decoration day. Callas are almost past blooming for this season. R. A. B.

A proposition to enter the proposed federation of improvement associations and welfare leagues of the city will be submitted to members of the Dayton Florists' Club at a meeting June 8, by Mrs. J. F. Young, member of the club.

Mrs. Young is in favor of such a federation to work for the general welfare of the city, and other members will

The Rising Eastern Market.

Decoration day business was decidedly discouraging. The weather conditions were so unfavorable that satisfactory handling of cut flowers was impossible. A large quantity of the stock received was absolutely useless, wilting down so quickly in the heat that it was impossible to send it out. Even stock that experienced judges considered safe for shipping orders was in some cases unfit to be used when received. There were heavy orders from the battle towns up the state on Thursday, but owing to the extreme weather, these orders, even when the stock was received in excellent condition, were not duplicated, the peonies and other flowers on the buyers' places coming in such large quantities as to render heavy purchases unnecessary.

Locally, Decoration day is not more than an ordinarily good day. While the florists near the cemeteries are, of course, especially busy, many of the best shops are quite dull. The closing days of the horse show brought some fashionable folks to the city, and for their benefit a few tasty dinners were given, calling for some of the best flowers. Then, there were one or two commencements. The excessively heavy downpour of rain on Saturday closed the week disastrously. Sunday was, however, an active day with the cemetery florists, the buyers who could not come out on Saturday owing to the rain making their purchases then. Monday opened badly, there being a great quantity of stock left over from last week, much of it in wretched condition. Several good weddings on Tuesday, followed by the Bryn Mawr commencement, have created a demand for really choice stock.

Peonies are in tremendous supply. Festiva maxima and Prince Nicholas touched 12 cents when in fine condition for shipping last Thursday. They are now bringing from 8 to 10 cents. Good ordinary stock, in prime condition, brought 4 to 6 cents on Thursday, but has since receded to 3 to 4 cents. Really choice carnations were extremely scarce, the fancies running up to 4 cents, and, in a few cases, more. They have now receded a point, but fully half the stock coming in is unsalable. The indoor sweet peas may be placed in the same class, but the outdoor peas now coming in, of all colors, are splendid stock, good flowers on long stems, that will give satisfaction anywhere. Cattleyas are still fine, and there is a heavy supply of good valley brought in for the June weddings.

Bridesmaid and Bride have deteriorated so badly with many growers as to render them unfit for nice work. Of course, there are some good flowers of each of these varieties to be had, but generally speaking Killarney is far and away the best pink, and Kaiserin must do service for white.

There seems a reaction in some parts of the market against the bolder Adiantum Croweanum and hybridum in favor of the more graceful Adiantum cuneatum when well grown.

Gardenias can still be had of fair quality, and there are some Easter lilies. Japanese snowballs are about over.

is going to get the full benefit of seeing every petal unfold, are arranged on either side of the doorway. Inside, the desk on the Schuylkill side is, as everybody knows, that of J. Otto Thilow, while that on the Delaware side belongs to George D. Clark. When Phil entered one day this week he turned first to the right (Phil naturally turns to the right, you know), but Mr. Thilow was busily engaged in expounding the merits of certain seeds to an anxious inquirer. So Phil turned to the left and saw the smiling face of Mr. Clark, and grasped his outstretched hand. Of course, Phil wanted to know something about bulbs in general, and lilies in particular. Mr. Clark's idea is that the Bermuda lily growers must wake up (are waking up, in fact) to a realization of the situation. They cannot afford to allow the Japs or anybody else to take away their bulb growing industry. To prevent this, they must grow good bulbs that can be depended upon to produce good flowers. And Mr. Clark feels confident that in a few years they will do this in a way that will leave no room for complaint. Lilium Harrisii Mr. Clark considers as the lily par excellence for the everyday grower, the grower who has other things in the house with his lilies, and who does not want to be bothered with extraordinary cultural details. Giganteum is all right for a late Easter, or where you can give it a house to itself, and force it hard for an early Easter, but under the conditions afforded by the general florist, giganteum is very apt to be late. Of the Formosa lily Mr. Clark spoke guardedly, feeling that he was not yet sufficiently familiar with this type to speak authoritatively.

Mr. Thilow finished with his customer about this time, and in response to a question spoke enthusiastically of the long, steady season seedsmen are enjoying. Everything about Seven Fourteen bespeaks the well-run business house, enjoying its full share of prosperity.

Decoration Day at the Cemeteries.

Inquiry at three of the principal shops near Laurel Hill cemetery, those of John & W. H. Westcott, Mrs. Mary Alburger and Edward Alburger, elicited the information that Decoration day business had been up to the average of former years. Blooming plants, and especially geraniums, sold well. An immense number of plants were planted out in vases and beds. Cut flowers sold fairly well only. Transient trade was poor. On Saturday it was entirely ruined by the rain, but on Sunday there was a marked revival.

The Retirement of Hemlock.

Hemlock boards have been almost from the first the mainstay of gardeners and florists in making their benches, hemlock standing the trying conditions of heat and moisture better than any other kind of wood to be had at a reasonable price. The conditions are, however, rapidly changing. Hemlock has advanced fully fifty per cent in price, placing it at a figure that seems well-nigh prohibitive. A substitute for hemlock was thought to have been found in the so-called pecky cypress, but this proved to be unsatisfactory to some. Today, however, the market offers a better grade of cypress at a price which is practically that of hemlock in its palmiest days. This cypress is being largely taken up by plant, cut flower and mushroom growers for their tables and beds, and those who have used it speak most enthusiastically of it, believing that in a fair, commercial grade of cypress the grower has secured a wood that will last well.

The June Exhibition.

The annual exhibition of roses and peonies of the Pennsylvania Horticultural Society was held June 2. The peonies were rather open, but roses were in their prime and there were many excellent exhibits. In peonies, John McCleary, gardener to Mrs. Penfield, was first on six white and six red. Joseph Hurley, gardener to J. W.

Paul, was first on six pink and on six Japanese varieties. Edward Swayne exhibited twenty-five fine Pæonia festiva maxima. Julius Roehrs Co. had a plant of Cattleya Mossiæ with twelve blooms. John McCleary exhibited thirty-two different vases of different varieties of outdoor grown roses. Joseph Hurley was first for best display of hardy perennials.

Club Meeting.

The monthly meeting of the Florists' Club was well attended June 2. The paper by Arthur A. Niessen, which appears elsewhere in this issue, was followed by a general discussion of the subject. Edward Reid said the fakers had done much to relieve the market. John Westcott asserted that if half the present number of flowers were grown the florists would be better off.

Various Notes.

The rose show of the Germantown Horticultural Society was held at Association hall Monday evening, June 1, the exhibits being in fine condition. Curiously enough, last year's exhibition, held on June 10, was too early for any of the outdoor roses.

Mr. Guille, of the Hubert Bulb Co., Portsmouth, Va., was a visitor in this city a few days ago.

Eugene Bernheimer is receiving some choice outdoor sweet peas, for which he has achieved an enviable reputation.

Charles E. Lehman, of the S. B. Vrooman Co., Ltd., has shipped a large order for cypress boards to J. B. Swayne, of Kennett, Pa.

A pictorial postcard received this week from H. Bayersdorfer at Blankenese, near Hamburg, Germany, states that everything is in bloom there and, between the lines, that Mr. and Mrs. Bayersdorfer are well and enjoying their trip.

Walter P. Stokes and William Swayne have been enjoying short fishing trips, the former in Maine, the latter near Lewiston, Pa.

Paul F. Richter, one of the brightest minds in the seed business today, believes that the telephone will be the most fruitful source of development in the future.

Paul Berkowitz, well and favorably known as a member of the firm of H. Bayersdorfer & Co., will leave this city next Tuesday, June 9, for Louisville, Ky., to attend the wedding of his son, W. F. Berkowitz, an attorney at law in the Commonwealth building, this city, to Miss Edna M. Levy, of Louisville.

B. Eschner, of M. Rice & Co., was on Monday cheerfully contemplating a large assortment of choice baskets, with pans to match, that were evidently about to leave his protecting care.

J. Otto Thilow will deliver an illustrated lecture on "Civic Improvements" at West Grove, Pa., Friday evening, June 5.

William J. Baker has been handling a grade of sweet peas that all the members of the firm agree is first-class. PHIL.

The Market.

Thus another Memorial day, which is the flower day of the year, has come and passed, to the satisfaction of most of us. The volume of business straight through, as reported by those questioned, was equal to last year, but at a less profit. The shipping, which began as early as Wednesday, was brisk, with plenty of everything on hand, except that more good carnations in colored shades could have been disposed of. These sold at from 3 cents to 5 cents, while roses realized 4 cents to 6 cents, some extras bringing 8 cents, though there was not much demand for the latter.

Local trade, from the retailers' standpoint, was good and no doubt would have been better had the weather been more favorable. May 30, 1907, all outdoor stock was practically at an end, while this year many outdoor flowers, such as lilac, tulips, lily of the valley, snowballs and narcissi were at their best, and this had a decided effect on the sale of indoor-grown cut flowers. A good many grocers handle pot plants around this time and this also was noticeable to the retailer. Thus, with nothing wanting, 10,000 carnations arrived from Chicago Saturday morning at less than $2 per hundred, but they came too late and did not sell like hot cakes.

Although some fine stock was on hand, the majority showed the effects of the recent warm spells. The Easter lilies that came in moved slowly; they would no doubt have been cleaned up had they any other color but white.

With all holidays now behind us and only commencement exercises and June weddings to follow, the present season is coming to an end, after which time alterations, vacations, etc., are in order.

Various Notes.

The C. C. Pollworth Co., which grows quite a batch of bedding stock, reports being nearly cleaned out on these.

E. Haasch has vacated his store at 782 Third street and will give his full attention to his new one on Hopkins road.

quite an increase in shipping trade for Memorial day over last year.

Everybody who does any bedding work says, "We are away behind with our orders; too wet of late."

The only thing which kept Heitman & Baerman, Wauwatosa, physically well was the big crop of carnations which they grow so well, for Decoration week. For to have several thousand carnation plants still to be planted in the field around June 1, which is their case, is enough to make anybody sick.

NEW ORLEANS.

Current Comment.

The weather for the last few days has been hot and dry, interfering with the planting of chrysanthemums. Some florists believe in early planting and others claim to make a better flower by late planting, if successful with cuttings. The largest part of our chrysanthemums is sold on the first of November, and missing that very day means much loss to the growers.

We recently had the pleasure to pay a visit to the Metairie Ridge Nursery Co. The place, which has been extensively planted in nursery stock, is comparatively new, so we were astonished, having not been there for a few months, to see how rapidly everything has been growing. Hundreds and thousands of trees, shrubs and palms of all sizes are ready to be disposed of. Different species of oaks, catalpa, lagerstrœmia, pittosporum, gardenia, hardy palms and many others are in perfect condition. Harry Papworth says he has yet plenty of room to spare on his ground and to save labor all his field roses are planted far apart and worked with plows and cultivators. The flowers, which are cut every morning, are now good and strong. He has an endless variety, still knowing which are the best for our climate. Of course, they are nearly all tea roses, few hybrids being planted. The greenhouses are for the most planted with roses and chrysanthemums; American Beauties for one and Mrs. Robinson for the other are in larger quantities. When finished he will have 12,000 mums. They are planted two plants together, each one for a single stem. They are doing away with raised benches, claiming that solid beds give better results.

Mr. Papworth is not complaining about business, saying that last month was the best he has had.

At the horse show, which was held May 30, for the best kept working horses, the Metairie Ridge Nursery Co. had a second prize for a fine black horse raised on the place. They also have a department for the breeding of fine pedigree dogs. Some water spaniels, collies and others find a ready market at good prices.

Current Comment.

Decoration day for 1908 was a record breaker and all the more so when trade conditions are considered. There was not much stock left. Bouquets of flowers were the most called for, but loose cut flowers were in good demand. There was a good supply of flowers from outdoors on hand. Lilac just about held out until the day. Carnations were sold at from 75 cents to $1 per dozen retail. There was a good supply of these. Roses brought $1.50 per dozen retail, while sweet peas brought $1 per hundred blooms. The funeral of a prominent business man's wife called for a large amount of stock and made everybody hustle a couple of days before Memorial day. A good many of the florists had to work all night Friday in order to get out their orders. Some nice peonies were to be seen, also nice lots of spiræa in pots and cut.

J. H. Cleary had some fine hydrangeas, lots of geraniums and other bedding plants.

William P. Pierce had a nice line of plants and cut flowers for Decoration day. Geraniums sold well. Good plants in bloom brought from 12 to 15 cents each.

R. H. Woodhouse had a busy time filling vases and urns for the cemetery.

S. S. Peckham had all he could do cutting and sending out his large crop of carnations.

R. E. Nofftz had a fine display of cut flowers and plants.

E. H. Chamberlain handled lots of cut flowers. Pansies sold well, 35 and 50 cents per dozen being the general price.

Our old friend, the Parker House faker, was on deck Saturday, May 30, with a full line of roses and carnations.

W. L.

OCONTO, WIS.—J. Sylvester says Decoration day trade was rather better than usual. The sales of cut flowers were about ten per cent less than last year but the increase in plant sales was at least twenty-five per cent.

GARDNER, MASS.—Arthur E. Graves has bought a greenhouse here and will grow vegetables for the Boston market.

TERRE HAUTE, IND.—Alexander Millar, who has acquired an interest in the Terre Haute Rose and Carnation Co., as reported in the REVIEW, was formerly foreman for the Green Floral Co., Dallas, Tex.

Seed Trade News.

Pres., George S. Green, Chicago; First Vice-pres., M. H. Duryea, New York; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland. Twenty-sixth annual convention at Hotel Pontchartrain, Detroit, Mich., June 23 to 25, 1908.

THE price lists of turnip, winter radish, spinach, etc., are out.

MRS. H. H. BERGER, of H. H. Berger & Co., New York, is on a trip to Europe accompanied by her daughter.

BOSTON seed houses say the season now closing has been an excellent one, averaging up well with its predecessors.

W. C. ADAMS, of Decorah, Ia., is secretary of the Iowa Seed Dealers' Association, which meets at Des Moines, June 9.

J. BOLGIANO & SON, Baltimore, do a large business in bedding plants in connection with their seed trade and have had a first-class season.

M. S. GRIFFITH, vice-president and manager of Griffith & Turner Co., Baltimore, has sailed for Europe, accompanied by Mrs. Griffith, expecting to be absent three months.

THE Hickory Seed Co., of Hickory, N. C., has been incorporated, with a capital stock of $20,000. The incorporators are R. O. Abernathy, W. J. Shuford, L. R. Sticker and A. L. Shuford.

THE Rocky Ford Gazette of May 22 said: "Burnet Landreth, of the D. Landreth Seed Co., of Bristol, Pa., one of the oldest seed firms in the country, and F. W. Bruggerhoff, of J. M. Thorburn & Co., of New York, the oldest seed house in the United States, were guests of D. V. Burrell today. Mr. Burrell took them over some of the country in his auto, to show them some of Colorado's best irrigated farms."

PROSPECTS AT ROCKY FORD.

Writing under date of May 25, D. V. Burrell, Rocky Ford, Colo., said:

"For the last two weeks there has been little water in any of the ditches here except the Rocky Ford ditch. Farmers under other ditches began to be discouraged, but we have had rains in the mountains, so these ditches can draw water now and everything looks promising for a good crop."

THE WEEK IN SEEDS.

Business is gradually tapering off in the seed houses. Corn planting is progressing in the west, but most of the season's seeds are now in the ground. Heavy rains have made some replanting necessary and some extra business has been occasioned thereby. Planting of both corn and cucumber in many localities is later than usual because of wet soil, the month of May having been an unusually wet one throughout the greater part of the United States. The plant business, which has become a large feature with most seed houses doing a counter trade, has been excellent and is not yet over.

In general, this season has been a thoroughly satisfactory one in net results and attention is now being turned to supplies for 1909. Crop prospects, while it is yet too early to speak definitely of any item, afford no occasion for alarm except as to a possible, if not probable, shortage of sweet peas and a possibility that late varieties of sweet corn will again fail to mature.

ERFURT SEED TRADE.

April brought very changeable weather at Erfurt, Germany. April 13, just a few days before Easter, we even had to put up with a heavy snowstorm. Of course, planting and other field work could not be pushed forward then, as we were accustomed to do in other years. Happily, May 1 set in with fine weather indeed, for our growers. Not only plenty of sunshine, but sufficient rain as well, so that planting and all other work outdoors can be carried on to the best advantage. All the growers are at present (May 23) busy planting, and such plants as scabiosas, antirrhinum, verbenas, phlox and asters are nearly all planted out by now.

Coming to vegetables, it can be said that cauliflower, kohlrabi and other things are growing nicely by now, especially cauliflowers are standing very fine; but the young plants have to suffer a good deal by the ravages of the ground flea, a great enemy of the young plants of all varieties of cabbage, cauliflower, kohlrabi, etc. Stocks, too, are very liable to the attacks of this insect. This nuisance is especially felt in a long spell of dry weather and is then hard to combat on a large scale.

Wall flowers, winter stocks, pansies, myosotis, etc., are in full bloom just now and present, in their great masses, a lovely view. They all wintered well and are giving good prospects for the next harvest of seeds. All outdoor primulas, too, have been, and some of them are still, flowering splendidly and of course promise likewise a fine crop of seeds.

Just now the growers are beginning to plant out the roots of cannas and dahlias. They both are acquiring more friends from year to year and no doubt our German growers can be credited with a good many high class novelties in both lines. One of our best and foremost canna-raisers is certainly Wilhelm Pfitzer, in Stuttgart. About thirty different and fine varieties have originated with him up till now and have made his name well known to all lovers of cannas. It would no doubt take up too much space in these columns if I attempted to mention all the names of our foremost and most successful German dahlia-raisers, so I can only say there are a good many of them. Perhaps later on, I shall, if space permits, write more about our German dahlias, especially about the pick of our novelties.

At a few big places I have seen, in my travels, cyclamens flowered most profusely and already weeks ago promised a good and large output of seeds. J. C. Schmidt's cyclamens fetched the best prizes at the Ghent quinquennial; likewise his special strain of gloxinias.

Compared with former years our seed growers have now to contend with many handicaps, which no doubt in time will begin to tell on the prices of seeds in general. First of all, labor is not only getting scarce, but it is getting up in price as well; lots of men and women, who formerly went to work with the seed growers, are now earning their living in all sorts of industrial establishments, where they get better wages and work fewer hours. Of course, I personally cannot blame the folks; they are like many others, only trying to make the best and the most of their lifetime. Naturally enough, the growers must get their work done and so they have to fall in line and pay better wages, too. This is not the only thing, but rent, manure, pots and fuel, etc., have been getting up in prices very much, too, so in time the growers will be compelled to advance seed prices all along.

Before posting my letter I must just mention that the day before yesterday and yesterday (May 21 and 22) very great damage was done in this district by some most terrific storms; hurricane, lightning and hail did great harm, not only to the plants outdoors, but under glass as well; mainly the Dreienbrunnen locality was very roughly handled by the tempest. ## AN ENGLISH-DUTCH-BULB SUIT.

A claim was recently brought by W. N. Alkemade & Co., of Nordwyk, Holland, against J. S. Fisher, an English nurseryman, for about $250, balance of $350, the price of bulbs sold and delivered. The defendant admitted that the bulbs were ordered and delivered, but counterclaimed $270 for damages through some of the goods being rotten and unsalable, and some of them not being true to name, and damages for loss of trade through the plaintiff delivering the bulbs in such a condition.

The defendant complained that the bulbs delivered in September, 1906, were not in a fit condition. They ordered 5,000 hyacinth bulbs of first quality, of which the price would be $25 per thousand, but instead hyacinths of second quality were sent, which would be listed at $15. In addition, 4,000 of them were rotten. A thousand narcissi also were rotten, and one consignment of iris bulbs was not true to name. A more serious matter was the loss in his business through customers becoming disgusted with the bulbs. When Mr. Alkemade came to collect his accounts he said he was willing to allow $40 for the useless bulbs, but the defendant did not consider that satisfactory. Evidence as to the condition of the bulbs and the complaints made by customers was given by defendant, his son and others.

Mr. Alkemade said his firm grew a great quantity of bulbs, and the hyacinths sent to the defendant were from their own grown stock. They had supplied other people that year, and he did not think more than three per cent of the bulbs had been complained about. All the bulbs were carefully examined before being sent over. He had no complaint from the defendant until he came over in the spring, and then the defendant's son was perfectly satisfied with the reduction of $40 offered conditionally upon the account being paid within eight days. He admitted that top quality hyacinths were not sent.

His Honor decided that the defendant was entitled to a deduction of $90 off the bill in consequence of the condition of some of the bulbs, but in his view damages for loss of custom were too remote for recovery, but whether that was so in law or not, there was no evidence before him of loss of custom, and he held, in fact, that no custom was lost.

ally starts in the cutting bench, through the use of sand containing organic matter. At first the trouble is confined mainly to the young roots, but gradually it works up to the stem. At first there may be only a small black speck, not larger than the point of a pin. This minute speck contains the fungus, however, and if this particular cutting is placed in the bed, the fungus will continue to grow as the plant grows. No evidence of the disease appears until pretty well along in the summer, when the plant becomes of considerable size and the demand for moisture on the roots is excessive. It will then be found that the plant is wilting during the heat of the day. Matters will go on in this way for two or three weeks, until eventually the plant utterly collapses and dies. I have seen houses in which from ten to twenty per cent of the plants died off in this manner. The disease may be in large measure prevented by proper selection of cuttings, rigid attention to the propagating bench, and avoidance of the planting out in the beds of any plants which show signs of the trouble.

Other Diseases.

A disease sometimes found on violet foliage when the plants have been improperly handled is known as Oedema or wart disease. This is a dropsical-like trouble that may be brought about by overwatering and by too dense shading of the plants. The tissues of the plant become gorged with water, and the foods not being properly assimilated, physiological conditions arise which result in the production of wart-like growths wherever there is any break or puncture. The bites of red spiders, the punctures of aphides, or even the breaking of the leaves through the handling of the plant, results in the formation of large, wart-like growths. Proper attention to light, ventilation and watering will avoid all these difficulties.

A disease common in violet houses at certain seasons of the year is produced by another fungus known as Botrytis. This Botrytis induces a soft rot of the foliage, and sometimes a whole crown may be seriously injured. Overwatering, excessive wetting of the foliage, drips or leaks in the roof, improper cleaning of the bed, and failure to remove all dead or decaying foliage are apt to bring on this trouble, especially in damp, cool weather.

Another malady similar to the foregoing, but produced in a different way, manifests itself on the edges of the leaves of the plants, which die and turn white. This trouble may be induced by a number of causes. Excessive use of fertilizers, excessive use of cold water on the roots, improper ventilation of the soil, proximity of a cold outside wall—all these things may check the root development and in consequence the edges of the foliage, not being properly nourished, will first wilt and then eventually die. The injury has always taken place a long time before it ordinarily becomes manifest. The statements made regarding the causes suggest the methods of prevention, namely, the avoidance of the conditions indicated.

Root-gall or Nematodes.

Under the head of diseases we would now mention the so-called root-gall or nematodes. This disease is produced by a minute microscopic worm which infests the roots, producing the galls. The nematodes live in the soil, and in order to have the plants free from them, the soil must be properly handled. Nematodes are not usually very injurious to the violet where the winters are cold and where the soil can be frozen. It is in the more southern regions that the nematode is likely to prove dangerous. The freezing of the soil, as already pointed out, will prevent serious trouble from the pest. We have used sterilized soil, producing the sterilization with steam. On the whole, however, I do not consider it necessary to adopt this somewhat expensive process where the soil can be properly handled, as already explained.

Red Spider.

One of the most troublesome insects that attack the violet is the ordinary red spider. There is little use in attempting to destroy the spider after the plants are once badly infested—better by far throw the plants away. The whole matter of combating this pest may be summed up in one word—prevention. Prevent the cuttings from becoming infested, prevent the young plants when set into the beds from becoming attacked, and finally, see to it that the spiders are not allowed to obtain a foothold at any time upon the growing stock. Syringing is about the only safeguard. Where sufficient water pressure is not at hand, it is best to use a spray pump. We have devised a comparatively simple nozzle for spraying plants—one that will give a wide, fan-shaped spray which will easily turn over the leaves, knock the spiders off and yet produce no injury to the crown. This nozzle may be attached to a ¾-inch hose, and if the pressure is over thirty pounds, it is all that is required. The fight against the spider must be persistently kept up, as after the plants attain considerable size, say about the latter part of August, it is not practicable to treat them longer.

When it is not found practicable to use water, as in the case of young cuttings or large crowns, which are badly infested, Ivory soap will be found an effective remedy. A five-cent bar of this soap dissolved in three or four gallons of hot water makes a solution that is immediately destructive to the spider. The solution should be put on with the spraying nozzle and then washed off in about an hour.

Other Insect Pests.

There are other insect pests to which I will briefly refer. These insects may be enumerated under the general head of cut-worms, saw-flies, gall-fly maggots, and leaf-cutting larvæ of various kinds. Up to a few years ago aphides, both green and brown, were a serious drawback to violet culture. Thanks to the introduction of the cyanide treatment, these are no longer to be feared. Cyanide gas, as is well known, is made by combining potassium cyanide, ninety-eight per cent pure, with commercial sulphuric acid. In the old practice it was usual to figure on about 0.15 of a gram (one gram equals 15½ grains avoirdupois) of ninety-eight per cent potassium for each cubic foot of space in the houses. Now it is the common practice to use milder doses and to allow the gas to remain in the house all night. The quantity is a matter of experiment. For a house twelve feet wide, 150 feet long, seven feet to the ridge, and three feet on the sides, we have used from three to four ounces of the cyanide, allowing the gas generated therefrom to remain in the entire night. The gas is developed by dropping bags of cyanide of potassium into earthenware jars containing the sulphuric acid diluted with water. So much has been written and published regarding the method of generating and using this gas that it is not necessary for me to enter upon further details here.

Business Methods.

I cannot close this somewhat general talk on the subject of violet growing without reference to the business practices connected therewith. A man may be ever so successful in producing the flowers, and, furthermore, may be able to ward off diseases and insects and other troubles, but without ability to understand and apply good business practices to the handling of his crop, he will not be able to make much of a success.

Violets, as a rule, are sold in bunches and the manner in which the flowers are picked, handled and bunched is highly important in the matter of getting them into the market. A violet is not a violet unless it is sweet. Tens of thousands of bunches of this beautiful flower, however, are sold which have no claim for being called violets except in color and general appearance. They lost their sweetness, and in consequence their best characteristic, largely by improper methods of handling. It is a great advantage to the violet grower if he is so situated that he can gather his flowers early in the morning, so that they will be put on the market the same day. To gather them at night and get them into the market the following day will, in a measure, provide for freshness, but much of the odor will be lost. Care and attention, therefore, in the gathering, bunching, packing, etc., is of the highest importance. Where the violets are shipped any distance it is desirable to have special packing cases made, in order that they may reach their destination in good shape.

Speaking generally, the violet, if properly grown, properly handled and properly marketed, will yield as good returns per square foot of space occupied as quite a number of other florists' crops. The returns will not be so large as for roses or for carnations, but they will be sufficient to enable one to make a respectable living and also something in addition.

GRAND FORKS, N. D.—E. O. Lovell says Memorial day trade shows a healthy growth each year and there was the usual increase this year. Little or no sun made stock off grade.

FORCING STRAWBERRY PLANTS.

Kindly tell us how to handle strawberry plants for winter forcing, especially how to get them ready and what varieties are best for the purpose.

F. A. N.

The preparation of strawberries for winter forcing should begin as soon as the young runners are large enough to handle. The best way to insure a strong plant is to plunge 3-inch pots filled with good soil in the strawberry bed, peg a plant from a good, strong runner in the soil in the pot and keep all other runners off by pinching out as soon as they appear. Leave the plants thus until the pots are well filled with roots, when they may be severed from the parent plant and in the course of a few days potted up into larger pots. Set the pots on a bed of ashes or some such material, to prevent the worms from working up into them too freely, and keep well supplied with water. The final shift should be into 6-inch pots, which should be well filled with roots by fall, but do not attempt to force until the plants have had a good freezing. Several varieties adapt themselves to forcing, but a perfect flowered variety is essential. The best we have tried is Nick Ohmer; it seems to produce pollen more freely than most others.

W. S. Croydon.

GREENHOUSE TOMATOES.

"Twelve years ago we grew our first winter tomatoes, using Lorillard and Dwarf Champion as the varieties," says W. Van Fleet in describing the experiments at the farm of the Rural New Yorker. "The yield was fair, although the greenhouse, to accommodate other plants, was run at a temperature much lower than is usual for tomatoes, and the construction such as to necessitate the use of boxes or large pots instead of the usual raised benches. A cross was effected between the two varieties, and the best of the resulting offspring, after a few seasons of selection, was introduced to commerce under the name of Combination. It was a good-sized, bright scarlet tomato, with much of the superior finish of Lorillard, productive both under glass and in the field, the only defect being a rather short stigma that lessened chances for full setting in midwinter when pollen is scantily produced. Very good yields were, however, reported from trials in many localities. Combination has since been used in our experiments as a breeder, crossing it first with Mayflower to lengthen the stigma and then with Best of All, a famous English variety of fine color and large size, but with objectionable coarse foliage. Considerable disturbances followed these repeated injections of alien blood, the seedlings coming anything but uniform in growth and fruit, but five years' selection of the most promising type, after again crossing with the original Lorillard, has given us a dependable variety, well suited to our conditions. Thirty plants are grown each winter in 12-inch pots, and space is given in the lower portions of the house for sixteen plants of Quarter Century, a scarlet-fruited, dwarf-growing variety, also an outcome of the original cross of Lorillard and the pink or crimson Dwarf Champion. These Quarter Century plants are grown two each in 14-inch pots, the combined yield in weight of fruits being about equal to that of each plant of the perfected Combination, though the individual tomatoes average much smaller.

"We get an average yield for the two varieties of six pounds to the pot for the winter. We marketed just 240 pounds during the past season, from December 20 to April 25, at the uniform price of 25 cents the pound, amounting to $60 for the crop. This is not by any means a banner yield, as ten pounds per plant has been attained in modern forcing houses under ideal conditions, but must be considered good for our comparatively low temperature. There were 993 tomatoes in the 240 pounds, making the average weight a trifle less than four ounces each. Sizes running not over six to the pound are acceptable in market, but those approaching four to the pound are liked, as they make a better appearance when sliced."

PACIFIC COAST.

San Bernardino, Cal.—The great celebration known as the Festival of the Arrowhead was opened here in the evening of Tuesday, May 19, and was continued the rest of the week. It is believed that the city never before entertained so many guests. At least 25,000 people witnessed the floral parade Thursday forenoon. Flowers of every available variety were lavishly used in the construction and decoration of the floats and other objects in the parade. Many substantial cash prizes were awarded.

In December a national apple show will be held at Spokane, Wash. As growers of apples in Canada are invited to compete for the liberal prizes offered, it would be more correct to describe the exhibition as international. The sum to be given in prizes is said to be $15,000, and of this amount $1,000 will be given for the best apple. The object of this exhibition is, it is stated, to "popularize the apple as the great national fruit" of America. Washington is remarkable for the extent to which apples are cultivated within its boundaries and also for the high state of development to which these fruits attain.

The Market.

We are not going to complain about business this time, as it has settled down to normal conditions and the prospect looks bright for a few weeks at least. Weddings are quite a feature at present and there is a brisk demand for funeral work. Early school graduations also help to swell the volume of trade and there is little stock going to waste. The weather stays cool, which is most helpful to indoor cultivation. Carnations are as fine as we ever saw them. There is not an oversupply and prices remain firm. Roses, too, still maintain an excellent quality and the demand is good.

Some early outdoor commercial flowers are in the market, such as Iceland poppies, peonies, stocks and iris.

Various Notes.

Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Clarke and John Holden have been in Seattle for a few days, to note the fighting capacity of Uncle Sam's Atlantic fleet.

J. B. Pilkington has gone to Milwaukee, Wis., to attend the nurserymen's convention.

Julius Broetje brought the first pond lilies to the city Saturday, May 23, and they retailed at $1 per dozen.

D. J. McNamara, a rose and carnation grower of Boston, Mass., is a new addition to Clarke Bros.' greenhouse force.

H. J. M.

The Sibson Rose Nurseries are cutting some splendid stock of Miss Kate Moulton and Richmond. On visiting their greenhouses recently, we saw "Kates" with stems five and one-half feet and Richmonds nearly as long; the flowers and foliage both speaking for the careful management of Mr. Woodington, the grower and foreman at this place, in getting his plants into such splendid condition, after the long, discouraging, sunless months of winter. Since its introduction, Mr. Sibson has been steadfast in his support of Miss Kate Moulton, which he considers is probably the best all-around pink rose in commerce. Nearly all his customers now ask for this rose in preference to Bridesmaid, and as it is grown at this establishment, it certainly is a satisfactory flower.

Fischer's Freesia Purity, the finest Freesia ever offered to the trade, and the only one worth growing. The flower heads are of very large size, and are of glistening whiteness and of thick, heavy substance, making its keeping quality superior to all others. The stems, always stiff, can be grown two feet and over, making this magnificent Freesia one of the finest decorative flowers. It can be used entirely alone in that respect, or with other long stemmed flowers. The greatest care is taken by us to keep this beautiful Freesia pure and free from all danger of mixing by carefully picking off all seed pods and not allowing one to ripen and drop its seed in the ground, where it would surely grow the next season and work disaster, as it does not come true from seed. So beware of buying stock that has been increased from seed. You will always find Purity here in all its purity.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

Business, although quiet, is slightly better than that for the previous two weeks. Warmer weather is the rule and flowers are in overabundant supply. There is a shortage, however, of fancy Beauties and some kinds of fancy carnations, but of everything else there is enough and to spare.

Peonies are now at their height and quantities are being sent into town from outside sources; from $3 to $5 per hundred is the ruling price. Gladioli are being used considerably, and such other kinds of outside stock as coreopsis, gaillardias and sweet peas help the retailers to make big window displays at a slight cost. Sweet peas, in spite of the fact that they are a cheap flower, are money-makers and more of them are sold than of anything else that is outside grown. Hawthorn in huge bunches has proven a good seller this spring and has easily been the most popular flower of its class.

Valley and Easter lilies are a drug on the market. The continued warm weather has brought out thousands of them that were not far enough advanced to cut for Easter, but they will soon be a thing of the past and the other varieties of Japanese lilies will take their places. From what I am able to learn, there will be a big cutting of both album and rubrum this season, and quite a fair lot of auratum.

Maidenhair fern, for the first time this year, is now in heavy supply. The cold weather retarded it somewhat all spring and now the excess of heat has made a big showing on the new growth.

Smilax in quantity is practically over and only a few scattered patches are to be depended on.

A few early asters have appeared, but they are of short stem and the public has not yet discovered them.

Business over in Oakland is fair, considering the season, and everyone is looking forward to a heavy trade during the month of June.

Various Notes.

John Kittle is having a rose house erected at his Ross station place. Geo. C. Pape, of Berkeley, Cal., is building it.

Hutchings & James, of Elmhurst, are erecting a fern house, 25x100 feet.

Domoto Bros. are receiving large consignments of orchids at their Elmhurst nurseries. They intend to make a specialty of this article in the future.

There seems to be quite a scarcity of nephrolepis in sizes large enough for immediate sale among the growers. The heavy demand for all varieties of these popular plants at Easter is responsible for the shortage. G.

OREGON CHERRY FAIR.

The third annual meeting of the Salem Cherry Fair will be held at Salem, Ore., July 9 and 10, 1908.

At the convention, last July, of the Pacific Coast Association of Nurserymen, a resolution was adopted saying that the second annual Salem Cherry Fair was the greatest and finest display of cherries known to history, and Salem was christened the "Cherry City of the World," by the association. That Salem is entitled to the name will be admitted by everyone visiting the Cherry Fair this

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.
Pres., J. W. Hill, Des Moines, Ia.; Vice-Pres., C. M. Hobbs, Bridgeport, Ind.; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester, N. Y.; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester, N. Y. The 33d annual convention will be held at Milwaukee, June 10 to 12, 1908.

THE annual meeting of the Peony Society will be held at Ithaca, N. Y., where the trials are, June 19 and 20.

NURSERYMEN will be specially interested in the spring show of outdoor roses by the American Rose Society at Bronx park, New York, June 10 and 11.

FRANK HOAG, of Coxsackie, N. Y., supplied 3,100 trees for an orchard on the farm of Fred Crane at Dalton, Mass. Wm. C. Harden, a well-known fruit grower of New Baltimore, N. Y., was employed to plant the stock.

MRS. P. S. PETERSON, leader of the forestry class of the Chicago Woman's Club, entertained the class June 3 at her home. The guests went through the Peterson woods on to the old Indian trail across the Peterson Nursery, and then to Peterson manor, where luncheon was served.

WATERLOO, IA.

The Waterloo Nursery Co. is the name of a corporation being organized to do the business of wholesaling and retailing nursery products. The capital stock of the new company is $25,000, divided into shares of $100 each. The concern will begin to transact business when the capital stock is paid in and a charter received from the secretary of state.

An option has been secured on seventy-five acres of land two miles east of the city on the Raymond road, next to the Illinois Central right of way. A spur will be built by the railroad company to the nursery, that cars of young trees and other products may be shipped and unloaded, sorted and shipped out again with as much convenience as possible. The ground on which the option was secured has been inspected by a prominent horticulturist, and pronounced to be ideal for the purpose for which it is intended.

The Waterloo Nursery Co. intends sending twenty-five traveling salesmen on the road early in June to secure orders for fall delivery. In view of the fact that the country is just awakening to the dearth of trees, both fruit and ornamental, and their relation to the rainfall and climate of the country, the organization of a nursery company of such a large scope in this city is considered timely. As soon as the full amount of stock is subscribed work will be started on the seventy-five acres of land to place it in shape for the transplanting of trees and shrubs and the shipment of cars of nursery products to stock the land will be commenced.

MORE EVERGREEN SEEDLINGS.

Having won his point as to the rate of duty on certain classes of evergreens, P. Ouwerkerk is working to broaden the list of nursery stock which shall be admitted at the lower rate. On his further protest the Board of General Appraisers has now held that Abies excelsa, or Norway spruce, produced from seed, and aucubas and rhododendrons were dutiable as evergreen seedlings under paragraph 252, tariff act of 1897, as claimed by the importers; also that azaleas were dutiable as nursery stock under the same paragraph. United States vs. Ouwerkerk (T. D. 28953) was followed.

of the ornamental crab-apples to unfold its flowers. The flower buds are cherry colored, the flowers, when expanded, being pure white, or white with a pinkish tinge. They have a delicate odor. The fruit, which is about the size of an ordinary cherry, is usually yellow, but occasionally reddish. This pyrus makes a beautiful lawn specimen and excites the admiration of all beholders while in flower.

Pyrus floribunda, the flowering crab-apple, has a shapely crown and in habit is similar to P. baccata. It is a native of Japan, from whence so many of our choicest flowering trees and shrubs have come. The buds are of a deep carmine color, the fully expanded flowers being rosy, produced in great profusion and sweet scented. The small fruit is reddish in color. The leaves, which in summer are of a bright color, fade into hues of golden and bronze in fall. This is one of the best known of the crab-apples and its wondrous beauty should warrant its being more largely planted.

Pyrus floribunda Scheideckeri, by some classed as a hybrid between P. floribunda and P. prunifolia, has a more erect habit than baccata and Toringo. The flowers are double, bright rose or pink in color, and last much better than the single varieties of pyrus.

Pyrus Malus Halliana makes a graceful and handsome, low spreading tree, with beautiful semi-double pink flowers. This variety is often called P. Parkmani, in honor of the late Francis Parkman, of Boston, who had a notable collection of choice shrubs and trees, and much of the stock sent out by nurserymen came from a large specimen on his lawn.

Pyrus Malus Toringo is a handsome dwarf growing crab-apple, at its best with us this year about May 16. The buds are pink and the flowers in the ordinary type pure white, the trees presenting a snowy appearance, with hardly a vestige of the foliage visible. The small fruits, not much bigger than peas, are yellow in color. The foliage turns to yellow and orange colors in fall. P. Malus Toringo atrosanguinea is a fine blood-red colored form, which presents a striking contrast to the pure white variety. Whether as lawn specimens or in shrubberies, where they have ample spread for their branches, the Toringos should be included in every representative collection. We have found that the trees do equally well moved in the fall or in the spring.

Pyrus coronaria, the ordinary wild crab-apple, should not be omitted from any collection. It flowers a little later than the other pyrus. Its habit is symmetrical, forming as it does a compact, round head. The pink or rosy flowers are very fragrant. The yellowish fruit makes excellent preserves. The double form, known as Bechteli, is probably the finest of all the ornamental apples. It makes a wider and more spreading head than P. coronaria. The foliage is dark green, and the double, delicate pink flowers are the largest of any of the forms, as fine and fragrant as a tea rose. Anyone who wants a beautiful lawn specimen should plant this lovely crab-apple. It flowers with us two weeks later than the floribunda and Toringo types, usually the first week in June.

Pyrus spectabilis, the Chinese flowering crab, forms a symmetrical, wide head. The leaves, green in summer, turn golden in fall. The reddish buds give way to pink flowers, and they, in their turn, to reddish yellow fruit. It is now, May 16, in full flower. The botanical name for the apples is now given as Malus, but the older name is still used by most of the nurserymen and it will be many years before the name pyrus will fall into disuse.

SPRINGFIELD, OHIO.

Current Comment.

Last week was a record-breaker in the sale of cut blooms in the peony trade, large quantities having been disposed of locally and quite a number of shipments made to out-of-town points.

Thomas McBeth timed his crop nicely, cutting the blooms while solid and bringing them to perfection in cellar storage just in season for Memorial day trade.

Many of our citizens, who had learned of the gorgeous sight on the grounds of the National Peony Co., journeyed seven miles over the Fairfield turnpike by automobile or carriage and were amply repaid for the trip. Six and one-half acres of peonies in full bloom, and in all standard and newer varieties, was a sight well worth beholding. John M. Good and Ward Welch, under straw hat and kerchief, were busily engaged in taking notes, throwing out mixtures and discarding varieties showing undesirable features, to the end that they might have a stock embracing the best sorts, absolutely true to label. For quite a number of days preceding Memorial day, they have remained on the premises, boarding and lodging at a farm house on the place.

Carrie M. Howell, our enterprising woman florist, is adding a house, 20x50, in which to increase her output for the local market.

The new cut rose house of the Leedle Rosary Co. is nearing completion and the benches will be covered with soil during the present week. This house makes an attractive appearance and is the subject of much favorable comment.

Stocks of rose plants have been fairly well cleaned out, but in the lines of soft stuff customarily grown here some surplus is reported. GE DALE.

RACINE, WIS.

The Racine Floral Co. is the name of a new firm of experienced florists who have just purchased the Fidler & Adams greenhouses, on Asylum avenue. It is the intention of the new proprietors to expend a large sum of money in making extensive additions to the greenhouses and equipping them so as to compare favorably with any of the larger establishments in the northwest.

Mrs. E. Miller, an experienced decorator, who for several years had charge of the decorations at Hotel Pfister, Milwaukee, will be associated with the firm and will have charge of the floral designs and decorations.

As soon as arrangements can be made the company will establish a downtown office.

LYNN, MASS.

The May meeting of the Houghton Horticultural Society, held in the lecture room at the Public Library, Tuesday evening, May 26, proved to be most instructive as well as interesting. Maurice Fuld, of Marblehead, a member of the society, and a representative of W. W. Rawson & Co., was present, and gave a talk on his work.

Being connected with such a prominent firm as Rawson & Co., and secretary of the New England Dahlia Society, Mr. Fuld was naturally in a position to impart considerable valuable information to the large audience which gathered at the library and for over an hour held the undivided attention of those present. At the outset Mr. Fuld spoke of the development of the seed business in Boston, and in various ways showed how the large firms handle their business. A contrast was made in the business of twenty years ago and that of today, the speaker believing that a great amount of the increase was due to the good work performed by horticultural societies, such as the one in Lynn.

Janesville Wis.—The three large greenhouses which have been erected for C. G. Dwight, at Jackman and East streets, are now almost ready for planting. The glass for these houses, amounting to 35,000 square feet, was furnished by the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co.

CLEVELAND.

The Market.

The intense heat the earlier part of the last week made it almost impossible to fill orders satisfactorily, as stock of all kinds was hard to keep. Carnations, especially, arrived soft and had to be moved quickly.

Roses of all kinds, excepting Kaiserin and Richmond, are coming in poor and small, almost down to summer average in quality. Peonies are in full blast, with plenty to fill all orders. Many thousands of this flower were used on Decoration day. Some outdoor sweet peas are being sent in and are picked up readily.

Various Notes.

Frank Piggott, of Meyers avenue, on the west side, reports fine trade for Decoration day.

Thieves entered the Florists' Exchange on Saturday night, taking a large quantity of long Beauties, as well as some postage stamps.

Knoble Bros. report a heavy run on decorated wreaths for Decoration day, as well as a good cut flower trade.

The F. R. Williams Co. is sending a fine cut of Kaiserin and also some good giganteum lilies.

C. A. Bramley, of Superior avenue, has had a busy week, disposing of thousands of potted plants of all kinds.

Peter Nichols reports a good call for all kinds of cut flowers for Decoration day.

J. E. Bonsall, of Salem, consigned a fine lot of candytuft to this market for Decoration day. B.

CAMBRIDGE, MASS.—Albert F. S. Mahegan, in his store at 10 Norfolk street, has recently been celebrating the fourth anniversary of his entrance into business in this city.

FALL RIVER, MASS.—John Lambert and his son, William, were thrown from a delivery wagon May 23 and were bruised and cut, but not seriously injured. The horse had become unmanageable and was running along Rock street, when the wagon came in contact with a telegraph pole and the occupants were thrown out. The wagon was almost demolished, as well as the load of plants.

FORCED LILAC CHANGES COLOR.

A correspondent of a European trade paper writes: "The Lilac Lucy Baltet is by no means new, having been in cultivation perhaps twenty-five years, but I was astonished to see it in flower at Ghent with blooms yellow cream color, as its ordinary color is old rose or faded rose, nearly copper of a delicate shade; we have bloomed it here within the last few days. Upon consideration I am inclined to think that it becomes yellow by forcing, but would never be that color outside. The same thing has happened with us with the variety Croncels, or Gloire de Croncels, which is deep carmine and purple out of doors, but which when forced produces flowers of a deeper yellow than the plant of Lucy Baltet seen at Ghent. These varieties, Croncels and Lucy Baltet, have never been largely used for forcing, otherwise these peculiarities would have been remarked earlier; they are both good forcers."

SIZE OF STEAM LINE.

What size steam line will it take to supply three houses each 18x200 for carnations and one house 21x200 for roses and what size opening will it take in the boiler to supply the size line that is required? The houses are five feet to the gutter and ten feet to the ridge. T. J.

To supply the four houses in question with steam, the main supply pipe should be a 6-inch. If the boilers are provided with 4-inch openings and are worked in a battery of two or three, better satisfaction will be secured than from using one large boiler. The boilers can be yoked together by a cross line of 6-inch pipe fed from the boilers through 4-inch.

PIPING IN KENTUCKY.

I wish to know how many runs of 2-inch pipe it will take under each bench to heat a house 43x54 feet. I use hot water, and wish to heat to 50 degrees. Sometimes we have zero weather or lower for a few days. I wish to grow carnations and bedding plants. The house will have six raised benches and one bed six feet wide, with 2-foot walks between. Will one 2-inch flow and two 2-inch returns under each bench be sufficient? I have at present in my house 15x40 feet two 2-inch flows and three 2-inch returns, or about 500 feet, which is satisfactory. In the house 10x45 feet I have about 600 feet of 1¼-inch pipe. What size boiler should I have to heat the whole plant? Mine is rated for 1,700 square feet of radiation. Is it necessary to lower the boiler, which is at the lowest corner, on account of the slope of the ground, and if so, how much? K. Y.

The quantity of pipe you have estimated, viz., one 2-inch flow and two 2-inch returns under each of the seven benches of the house 43x45 feet, should be sufficient to maintain the temperature specified. As the three houses require in the aggregate about 1,000 square feet of radiation, a boiler rated to carry 1,500 square feet of radiation would be sufficient for your work.

CARE OF APPARATUS.

Should the water be removed from a hot water boiler during the summer? Should hot water pipes be emptied also? If they are not emptied, what is the damage done? Should a small fire be started when the pipes and boiler are empty to dry out the boiler? What causes the pipes to sweat in summer? Should the pipes be painted to preserve them? M. C.

At the close of the season, and several times during each season, the boiler and heating pipes in either a steam or hot water heating plant should be drained and washed as thoroughly as possible, but never should be left empty. If after draining, as above noted, the plant can be filled with rain water, there will be less deterioration than with the use of well or spring water. Before starting the fires in the fall, drain off the water that has stood in the plant during the summer, refill with fresh water and go ahead, if all joints are in good repair.

Never make a fire of any kind in an empty boiler, whether it be a steam or a hot water boiler, unless you wish to ruin it.

The so-called sweating of water pipes is due to the fact that they have a lower temperature than that of the surrounding air, which causes the moisture of the atmosphere to condense upon their surface.

Although some growers paint the pipes to preserve them, we believe it is false economy, and pipes should never be painted. A rusty pipe is a more efficient

BALTIMORE.

The Market.

Business remains about the same as it has been for the last few weeks. Everything is at a standstill on account of so much rain. The markets are overstocked with all kinds of pot plants, especially geraniums and rose bushes. There is a scarcity of moonvines and these have to be ordered from Philadelphia.

In previous years the Decoration day business was a rush from start to finish, but this year it fell far below the sales for last year. The farmers overstocked the markets with peonies, which were dead ripe and soon wilted in the open.

It looks as though there will be a good many plants left over this season.

Various Notes.

The Gardeners' Club has appointed a committee to revise the by-laws of the club and change its name so that it shall be known as the Gardeners' and Florists' Club of Baltimore. The club was organized in March, 1887.

M. S. Griffith, of the well-known firm of Griffith & Turner Co., has sailed for Europe for three months, accompanied by his wife.

George M. Cook, of Pimlico, has installed an electric motor for pumping water for his range of glass.

J. O. Willheim, of Gardenville, Md., has erected a new house, 200 feet long, for asparagus.

Wm. Lananahan has invited the club to visit his place, called Blenheim, June 10.

Miss East, who opened a store on West North avenue, has gone out of business. She was formerly with Vincent, on Baltimore street.

The Flower Garden had an attractive window display for Decoration day.

J. Bolgiano & Son sold 14,000 geraniums this season. They handle all kinds of bedding plants in large quantities, which are grown on contract by H. J. Quick, who has been growing them for the last four years. They advertise extensively, both in the daily papers and in the street cars. Their seed store is one of the largest seed houses in Balti-

HAMILTON, OHIO.

Henry Hoelscher, of 916 Vine street, who is the nestor of florists in this city, celebrated his eighty-fourth birthday May 28. He has been a resident of this city since 1851 and when the Civil war was declared he enlisted in Company B, 106 O. V. I., and remained with his company, of which he was a corporal, until the close of the war.

Aside from being a little rheumatic, he is still in the best of health, and is promised several more years of life. He has lived at his present place of residence nearly a half century. When he moved there the ground surrounding his place was nothing but cornfields and garden land. Now he is surrounded by dwellings in every direction.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

Business was away off the first three days of last week, but boomed up grandly for Decoration day, surprising everyone. But after all is said and done, it is doubtful if anyone made much money, as stock was very plentiful and prices very low. In fact, everything outside which usually blooms from May 1 to July 1 was in bloom, and with peonies and June roses at their best, one can well know that the trade must have suffered.

The plantsmen, however, did a record-breaking business and more than one person hunted to get a few plants in bloom. There is much bedding still to be done, as the wet weather hindered the work.

Beauties and roses are a glut and lilies are quite plentiful and good.

Carnations are showing the effect of the heat.

Various Notes.

Mr. and Mrs. Gustave Ludwig have announced the engagement of their daughter, Miss Lena Ludwig, to Victor F. Bergman, of Chicago. The engagement will terminate in a June wedding at St. Paul's United Evangelical Protestant church, north side, Pittsburg.

The Pittsburg Florists' Club will meet Tuesday, June 9, in the store room of the Pittsburg Cut Flower Co.

Faulk & Bros. had an order for a horse, natural size, which, on Decoration day, was placed in front of the mausoleum which held the remains of Geo. E. Smith, known as Pittsburg Phil. The design was well executed and attracted so much attention that the crowds tramped the grass out for 200 feet around the mausoleum. The cemetery officials, therefore, had the horse removed Sunday, before the people got out, and placed a wire around the tramped section and a guard to keep the people out.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

Business was away off the first three days of last week, but boomed up grandly for Decoration day, surprising everyone. But after all is said and done, it is doubtful if anyone made much money, as stock was very plentiful and prices very low. In fact, everything outside which usually blooms from May 1 to July 1 was in bloom, and with peonies and June roses at their best, one can well know that the trade must have suffered.

The plantsmen, however, did a record-breaking business and more than one person hunted to get a few plants in bloom. There is much bedding still to be done, as the wet weather hindered the work.

Beauties and roses are a glut and lilies are quite plentiful and good.

Carnations are showing the effect of the heat.

Various Notes.

Mr. and Mrs. Gustave Ludwig have announced the engagement of their daughter, Miss Lena Ludwig, to Victor F. Bergman, of Chicago. The engagement will terminate in a June wedding at St. Paul's United Evangelical Protestant church, north side, Pittsburg.

The Pittsburg Florists' Club will meet Tuesday, June 9, in the store room of the Pittsburg Cut Flower Co.

Faulk & Bros. had an order for a horse, natural size, which, on Decoration day, was placed in front of the mausoleum which held the remains of Geo. E. Smith, known as Pittsburg Phil. The design was well executed and attracted so much attention that the crowds tramped the grass out for 200 feet around the mausoleum. The cemetery officials, therefore, had the horse removed Sunday, before the people got out, and placed a wire around the tramped section and a guard to keep the people out.

TARRYTOWN.

The regular monthly meeting of the Tarrytown Horticultural Society was held Friday evening, May 29, with President Angus in the chair. The following gentlemen were elected active members of the society: George Begg, John McGregor and Alexander Mark. One application was received.

For this meeting J. W. Lindsay had offered prizes for the best exhibits of cut flowers from shrubs and hardy herbaceous plants. Two fine lots were exhibited, one by John Woodcock, gardener to General McAlpin, Ossining, N. Y., and the other by Alexander Maitland, Irvington, N. Y., which won in the order named.

The annual June exhibition will be held in the Music hall, Tarrytown, N. Y., in the afternoon and evening of June 12, 1908, and we hope that every member will try to make an exhibit of flowers or plants and help to make this exhibition a success. Exhibition free to all interested.

Schedules for this, and also for the November exhibition, are ready and will be sent to all interested. Apply to Secretary E. W. Neubrand, Tarrytown, N. Y.

Subject and exhibits for next meeting will be "Shrubs and Hardy Perennials."

L. A. Martin, Cor. Sec'y.

WASHINGTON.

The Decoration day rush is over and, after looking things over, we find business was not up to the standard. There was plenty of stock to go around, but peonies were scarce, as the hot weather which we have been having for the last two weeks finished them up in short order. Up to June 19 the commencement rush will be on. This will keep everyone busy, as this work is more divided than any other class of work. O. O.

Richmond, Ind.—The contract for the erection of the additional greenhouse at Glen Miller park has been awarded to Isaac Wilkinson.

New Canaan, Conn.—Stephen Hoyt is having a new 56-inch boiler installed in his Stanley steamer, with a capacity of 700 pounds of steam. When completed this will be one of the speediest cars in town.

A NEW CYRTOMIUM.

Cyrtomium falcatum Mayi is a handsome and useful variety of an old favorite fern. The type is well known for its value in the cool greenhouse and in the home, but this new variety will be far and away more elegant than the type and just as useful. The fronds of Cyrtomium falcatum Mayi are rather more stiff than those of the type, and less arching, but they spread gently and are prettily crested. It originated with H. B. May & Sons, Edmonton, near London, England, and was given an award of merit April 14 by the Royal Horticultural Society.

TALKS ON GREENHOUSE MATERIAL :: ::

No. 7.

BUYING greenhouse material is in many ways just like buying a horse—you must place a certain amount of confidence in the party you buy from. You may be a good judge of horses, but you don't know it all, for nobody can tell what's inside of the horse until you try him. You may be a good judge of greenhouse material too, but do you know all the various kinds of sap and all about the hundred and one little defects that cypress has which are hard to detect—in fact, do you know what is inside of the wood by looking at the outside? There's no use in talking, Mr. Florist, you've simply got to have confidence in the firm you buy your greenhouse material of. We are bending all of our efforts to gain your confidence and after being in business forty years we think we have succeeded fairly well in a thousand or more cases. It's the truth when we say that we do not know of one customer who was dissatisfied with the quality of our goods. You can tell good workmanship when you see it, you can tell whether the material is made accurate or not, you are a fair judge of the price, but when it comes to the real quality it takes an expert and we are paying this expert a high salary to see that you get the right quality. It means something to you when we say that not one customer has yet complained of the quality of our material. Don't be fooled by low prices, but look into things closely before you buy. For the hundredth time we insist that "it pays to pay for quality." Our large 96-page catalog will be sent anywhere free on request.

THE RETAIL FLORIST.....

THE WISCONSIN EAGLE.

A few weeks ago the REVIEW published reproductions of photographs showing the Eagles of Illinois and New England. Now comes one from Wisconsin. It is accompanied by the following letter from P. N. Obertin, of Kenosha:

"Some time ago we noticed the REVIEW'S reproductions of Eagle designs. I send you herewith a photograph of our Eagle, adopted as the official emblem of our local aerie. This piece was made by Mrs. P. N. Obertin and perhaps the trade would like to compare this style with the others."

"SHOW ME."

W. J. Palmer & Son, of Buffalo, who are represented in the REVIEW'S department for the cards of "Leading Retail Florists," have built up a large business in the execution of orders for florists who have work to deliver in Buffalo, and have adopted a somewhat unique means of showing the customer at a distance what he gets for his money. They have an arrangement by which it is possible to photograph their work at moderate expense, and promptly. In most cases when an order is received from out of town, and in every case where the value is more than nominal, it is their intention to make a photograph of the design to send to the out-of-town customer. They find it makes a hit.

HOUSE DECORATING.

The Green for a Wedding.

We will now suppose that we have a decoration calling for a group of palms in a front room, trimming the fixtures and arches with smilax, two mantels to take care of, several vases of flowers, and a table to decorate.

We will begin by arranging the palms, while the helper, if we have one, may start to trim the fixtures. In the group of palms we should avoid even lines as much as possible. Start with a few tall, not too bushy plants, set high up on stands, gradually working down to the floor. Every plant should have a suitable pot cover.

When trimming a lighting fixture with smilax, asparagus, or any green, do not try to hide the whole fixture—just cover it lightly with green. Commence with the thin or pointed end of the green and work down, doing the arms last.

Next in order would be the arches, which the assistant can start while you are decorating a fireplace—an ordinary, open fireplace, in which a few plants are to be arranged, as it is not in use. First put a nice, graceful palm into place, putting it back a ways into the opening, so you will get more of a top view of the palm; then put the pandanus into place and lastly the ferns. Now, this all sounds quite easy, but often you will experience some trouble in getting a nice, airy effect, or to get the plants to stay in the position you wish them to. By rearranging them several times the desired effect can usually be attained. Some newspaper crumpled up will aid you in holding the plants in a tilting position. This paper must be hidden with some fern leaves, or, still better, some southern smilax, if this is available.

The second one is not an open fireplace and we will just stand a nice palm in a jardiniere a little to one side at the front. On the mantel we are to bank some ferns. Clear away all the bric-a-brac, or have some member of the family do so, which may save us some unlooked-for expense. Lay a piece of newspaper across the top of the shelf and also against the wall; this takes but a moment and will prevent injury to the woodwork and wall-paper. Now, if you have some of the wire supports made by wiremen for tilting plants we will use these; if not, we will have to fall back on some more old paper to assist us. Cover the whole top of the mantel with some nice, bushy Bostons, tilting them so as to have a nice effect from all points in the room. You might place a larger fern at one side, so the whole will not appear too formal.

We left our assistant trimming the arches. No set rule can be given for this work. It depends somewhat on the amount of smilax we can use. Drape it in various ways on the different arches. Do not overload them with green. Over a small doorway a pretty scheme is to arrange the smilax on one side only.

This is what I would call the more rough work on a decoration. As ours is to be an evening wedding, we will not bring the flowers until the afternoon.

Before we leave the house see that we have cleaned up the worst of the dirt we have made. Also make sure of what we want for the afternoon, as the customer may have changed her mind since the time the order was placed.

In my next article we will take care of the flowers and table.

HUGO SCHROETER.

A FLORIST TAXIDERMIST.

"Faulk & Bros., in Allegheny market, had an order for a floral horse, natural size, which, on Decoration day, was placed in front of the mausoleum which held the remains of George E. Smith, known as Pittsburg Phil. The design was well executed and attracted so much attention that the crowds tramped the grass out for 200 feet around the mausoleum."

The above is from the Pittsburg letter in the REVIEW of June 4, and whatever one may think of the taste of the people who would order such a floral design, it must be admitted that no wiser selection of the florist to make the piece could have been made, for

The Eagle in Wisconsin.

Frank Faulk, of the firm of Faulk & Bros., is known throughout Pittsburg and Allegheny for his knowledge of natural history.

Someone says a man without a hobby loses half the pleasure of living. The photographs here reproduced are flashlight pictures of two corners of Frank Faulk's den. He is an enthusiastic taxidermist, besides being a great hunter and fisherman. Most of his specimens are his own trophies and of late he has been turning his collection into a breadwinner, as some of the large department stores are arranging window displays of seasonable hunting and fishing scenes, using his material. A window display of his specimens in a flower store, or otherwise, never fails to hold a crowd all day.

In connection with his specimens of taxidermy he has a curio collection; along one side of his den are hundreds of pistols, each with a history, and nothing delights him more than to have his friends spend an evening with him and look over his collection. These things are a part of his home. His business is in the Allegheny market, where he and his brother conduct a very prosperous flower business.

Ficus Elastica.

One of the foliage plants which never seems to wane in popularity is the rubber plant. It is one of the best subjects for culture in the home, and with Aspidistra lurida, Kentia Belmoreana and Nephrolepis Bostoniensis makes a quartette hard to beat.

Where there is any considerable stock of ficus, it pays to grow them in a lath shed during the summer months. They become stocky and are of a splendid deep green color when taken indoors. Occasionally we see these stood under the shade of trees. Such treatment, however, superinduces legginess. They are better in such a position, nevertheless, than under glass.

Cuttings produced by ringing during the winter months should now have become well rooted in their first pots and should require a shift. Use heavier compost now and press it quite firmly in the pots.

If for any reason you have failed to do the necessary propagation and still wish to do so, keep your old stock plants in a shaded house, where a close, moist atmosphere is maintained. By keeping the moss constantly moist which covers the cuts, the shoots will soon send out roots and make you serviceable plants before winter.

Pandanus Veitchii.

Among colored-leaved foliage plants Pandanus Veitchii is one of the best. It makes a useful plant for the house, in a small size for the dining-table and in larger sizes for filling jardinieres. It also makes a good piazza specimen, while in mixed tropical beds it is hard to beat. Even the oldest and most ungainly plants can be utilized to advantage for the latter work.

While classed as a stove or warm greenhouse plant, it succeeds much better in summer grown in frames, if these are of sufficient depth to give the plants the required headroom. Put in a coating of coal ashes to stand the pots on. Shade the glass well and syringe freely in warm weather, closing up the frames so as to bottle up a brisk heat each afternoon. Allow the temperature to run up to 100 degrees in the shade, with plenty of moisture, and your pandanus will revel under such conditions.

The side growths on your pandanus can be rooted at any time during the year. Now, while there is so much sun heat, you will have few failures if you have your propagating bed shaded and keep the sand constantly moist.

Palms.

The question of additional shading for palms should not be overlooked just now. Heavy rains will soon wash away much of the early coatings, and if more is not added, the foliage will soon take on a yellowish hue. If the houses are glazed with clear glass it is especially necessary that no clean panes are to be found in the roof, or the sun may soon ruin the foliage on some valuable plants and render them unsalable.

Plants which are well rooted in their pots should receive an occasional watering with liquid manure, varying this with a surface dressing of some well concentrated chemical fertilizer, of which there are now several on the market and which are valuable aids to the growers of all foliage plants. Ply the hose freely among palms, keeping a genial, moist atmosphere at all times. Direct the water through a sprayer with such force as to keep insect pests in check and thus save you much sponging.

Sweet Peas Outdoors.

The flowers from plants under glass present a jaded appearance now that the outdoor crop is coming in season. This remains far the most popular of all flowering annuals and, although sweet peas now are procurable every month in the year, people never seem to weary of them. The odor seems particularly refreshing during the hot months and, while prices may rule low at times, good flowers will always sell.

To keep the plants flowering during the summer they should have a little attention now. A thorough hoeing and clearing out of weeds should be followed with a liberal mulch of grass, straw, or well decayed manure, the latter being most valuable. This will help to keep the roots cool and moist. In hot, dry weather a hosing overhead in the evenings will refresh the plants and help to keep aphis and red spider in check. Pick the flowers clean and do not allow any seed pods to form.

Each grower will know probably what colors suit his customers best. As a rule, mixtures are not wanted, but separate colors, like white, light and dark blue, and various shades of pink, will always sell.

Cultivation.

It may seem like an old story, but on the persistent use of the cultivator much of the success or failure of an outdoor crop will depend. Any practical man can see at a glance the steady improvement in the crops, if the soil is kept constantly stirred. To allow the ground to become hard and baked is poor policy. Plants will not thrive under such conditions, no matter how generously the land has been prepared for them. A newly cultivated patch of ground is pleasing to the eye and the plants show up much better than on one left to nature. We get, during the hot months, Floral Horse made by Faulk Bros., Allegheny.

long dry spells and occasional torrential rains. It is specially necessary after the latter to ply the cultivator to hold the moisture in the ground.

The growing season is a short one, and to make the most of it we must keep insect pests in check and tickle the surface soil frequently. While the cultivator will suffice for most of our crops, it will be necessary to do some hand weeding where weeds are near the plants, and the hoe can be used advantageously where rows are too closely placed to admit the use of horse or even hand cultivators.

Bedding Out Aftermath.

It is usually well along in June before bedding out is really over. Owing to the warm May, work is more advanced than usual in this important line. As batches of various bedding plants become thinned out, place them together to economize in watering. Do not throw the empty pots on or under the benches. Keep them cleared away and stack them neatly for future use.

Your own bedding out should be completed before this time. Nothing adds more to the appearance of a commercial establishment than nicely planted beds of cannas or geraniums on a neatly trimmed lawn.

Probably you may have a miscellaneous assortment of foliage plants of rather inferior quality to attract customers' eyes, such varieties as ficus, crotons, dracænas, pandanus, aspidistras, etc. These will make a nice mixed tropical bed. A few fancy-leaved caladiums, curculigos or ophiopogons will also work in nicely and any left-over alternantheras will do well as a groundwork. A hosing over on warm evenings will benefit such a bed greatly, and it is surprising how attractive it will be all summer.

Brief Reminders.

Make a final sowing of asters and stocks for fall flowering in the open.

For fungous growths on outdoor crops use Bordeaux mixture. This is easily made. Slake four pounds lime slowly in a tub; dissolve six pounds sulphate of copper (blue vitriol) in another tub. When both are cold, pour together in a barrel. Add water sufficient to make fifty gallons and mix thoroughly. Use some Paris green in the mixture for leaf-eating insects. Eight ounces per barrel will suffice, or three pounds arsenate of lead.

Get the little cuttings of geraniums for winter blooming potted off at once and grow along in a light, sunny house.

Put stakes to the fuchsias for late summer blooming before they become twisted. Pinch out the tops and remove all flower buds for some time.

Order lumber for bench repairs without delay. There is usually a good deal of this work to do and the sooner it is finished the better.

Pot along young seedlings of Dracæna indivisa. These will do well outdoors if stood on a bed of cinders.

Choose cool evenings for fumigating the houses, especially if they are to be left closed all night.

In bedding out during dry weather, be sure the balls of all the plants are well soaked before planting.

Put supports to tuberous rooted begonias before they come into flower, as the shoots are easily broken.

CREOSOTE IN GREENHOUSES.

With reference to the use of creosote in greenhouse construction, as discussed in the REVIEW of June 4, page 10, I entertain the same ideas as are there expressed by the John C. Moninger Co.

My opinions are supported by the results of disastrous experience which came under my observation several years ago. Houses in which roses and carnations had been grown for several years had a portion of one of the partitions treated with a wood preservative containing creosote, and not until the lumber so treated was removed was it possible to grow either of the crops for which the houses were designed and for which they had for several years been successfully used.

I do not think it safe to use creosote in houses to be used for either roses or carnations. Other plants may be able to withstand it, but I consider it risky business. L. C. CORBETT.

OPPORTUNE TIME TO AGITATE.

Two frightful gas accidents have occurred within the last ten days, here in Chicago. The deadly gas fumes claimed eight human lives as victims. Is it not a good time to agitate in favor of the use of electric lights, to supersede gas? Every florist should do this, for what would improve house conditions for plant life more than the abolition of gas fumes, obnoxious to both plants and people? It will be a prosperous day for the florists when house plants can be made to flourish with people in general, for then will they buy cheerfully and bountifully. A long step in that direction will be taken when gas has been expelled.

ANNA GRACE SAWYER.

PLANT FOR NAME.

I am sending you a flower, with foliage, which I would like to have you name, if it has any commercial value.

J. H. P.

It is a variety of franciscea, of little commercial value.

EARLY PLANTED HOUSES.

Care of the Growing Stock.

Planting will now occupy the greater part of the growers' time, and during the busy time the earlier planted houses are apt to be somewhat neglected. Beyond the regular watering, ventilating and syringing, they are in many cases left to themselves. Under no circumstances should cultivating be neglected, as without this encouragement during hot weather the plants will come almost to a standstill, which is the preliminary to going back.

Keeping a strict guard on the encroachments of pests and devising means for their destruction must be strictly paid attention to, and, in order to get the full benefit of syringing, fumigating and free air circulation, the plants must be kept tied up and not allowed to scramble over the ground. If this is neglected, red spider cannot be kept in control, as it is impossible to use the syringe with effect.

Beauties which have made some growth should be gone over and, where necessary, the tops should be cut out in order to make them bush. Cut off all the buds as soon as they show color. Keep a careful watch for spot, which will soon begin to show where conditions are favorable.

FOR SIMILAR TREATMENT.

I have a three-quarter-span house about twenty-five feet long and eighteen feet wide, in which I am anxious to try some roses on the middle and the high side bench. I would like to know what two good varieties that will take about the same treatment can be raised. I would like a good white and a good pink. Would it be advisable to try three varieties? Kindly give a green man a little advice. J. G.

If the house has a southern exposure it is suitable for any of the ordinary varieties used by florists. Bride is by far the best white and Bridesmaid a good pink. Chatenay is a fine pink and Ivory a fine white. These last named are not quite so susceptible to mildew as other varieties. Killarney is also a good pink and easily grown. RIBES.

ROSE STOCK IN POTS.

Please give full directions as to the care of rose stock in pots, such as Brides, Maids, Richmond, Killarney, etc., which are not to be planted for some time yet. Some of the plants I have in my care have dropped a good many leaves. Will the use of dry sulphur for dusting the plants do this? Will too much of a drying out have the same effect?

H. G. F.

Rose stock in pots during the hot months requires a deal of care to keep it growing and free from such pests as mildew and spot.

As soon as the pots are filled with roots, they should get a shift to prevent their receiving a check.

By allowing them to dry out the roots will suffer, as they are usually close to the sides of the pots and are easily scorched, and in consequence the leaves will drop. Sulphur in excess has a very debilitating effect, especially when it gets mixed with the soil.

What they require is ample pot room, plenty of room on the bench, all available sunlight, sufficient water, syringing and a free circulation of air. RIBES.

PLANTS FOR SPRING SALES.

What is the best size of glass to use in a house for growing bedding plants principally? What quality and what price should it be bought at, considering that I would be buying several months in advance of need? Would like to use not less than 16x20 if it would be all right. When should I start to grow Asparagus plumosus nanus, Asparagus Sprengeri, ferns and daisies for next spring sales? Is it best to buy small plants or grow from seeds? E. B.

Plants for spring sales, it is generally assumed, will grow in any old house, but the advantages of light, modern houses over those of rather ancient erection are so obvious that no practical grower would want to return to the old type. Nevertheless, good stock can be turned out from the latter. I would advise using 16x24 glass, the same as you would put in for roses, carnations or mums. Write to any of the firms that advertise glass in the REVIEW. They will tell you about price, etc.

Asparagus plumosus nanus and A. Sprengeri can still be sown and make nice plants for next spring's sales. I think it would be better for you to buy small ferns rather than try to raise them from spores. Marguerites, if only wanted in small sizes, need not be rooted until next February. If you want large flowering plants, root them late in the fall. All of the plants named can be bought cheaply by the hundred or thousand, and if you have no propagating facilities, it would probably be better for you to buy them from some one of the many advertisers of the plants you are in need of. By scanning the classified advertising department of the REVIEW, you will be able to find a good list of excellent firms who can supply your needs.

Nephrolepis ferns, if bought in small sizes now, can be benched and lifted in the fall or kept in pots as preferred. They will need some shade, but it must not be heavy. The asparagus also prefers a light shade. Some other ferns, like adiantums, require fairly heavy shade in summer. C. W.

THE PEONY IS POPULAR

PEONY SHOW AT ANDORRA.

The accompanying illustration, from a photograph taken last week, shows the peony show in the packing shed of the Andorra Nurseries, at Chestnut Hill, Pa. In all 350 varieties of peonies were staged, one vase of each. They included many of the old standbys rarely seen on the exhibition table of today, and many of the novelties that have not yet made their bow. There were also all the best of the standard varieties. A brief visit left time for but a few random notes on this really beautiful exhibition.

Among the peonies that seemed to have special merit as cut flower varieties was Couronne d'Or, an immense white, its name, Crown of Gold, being well deserved by the yellow circle in the center, which becomes more apparent with age. Couronne d'Or, staged side by side with Festiva Maxima, gave excellent opportunity for comparison. Festiva Maxima is the purer white of the two, but the pale ivory tint of Couronne d'Or is not sufficient to take it from the white class. Couronne d'Or has the merit of being a splendid keeper. The flowers on the table were one week old and still in good condition. In size there is little to choose between these two varieties.

Among the novelties were several of Kelway's latest creations. An exquisite single, named Moonbeam, was particularly pleasing from its varied shades of color.

The show was by no means confined to peonies. There were hardy roses, conspicuous among them being Alexander Dickson & Sons' new rose, Irish Beauty, a single white, pure and fragrant. There were vases of many outdoor flowers of the day, the foxgloves being especially decorative. Specimen trees and evergreens relieved the intensity of color, a beautiful Japanese maple in an earthenware jar being a feature. An important change, made since the photograph was taken, was the placing of boughs of green and copper beech in front, where the burlap is seen.

John H. Humphreys, William Warner Harper's right-hand man, said there would be a new exhibition each week during the summer. Japanese iris and hardy phloxes will soon follow. PHIL.

OPEN HOUSE AT PETERSON'S.

Charles Willis Ward, of Queens, N. Y., president of the American Peony Society, was the first of the stream of members of the trade who are this week wending their way out from the business district of Chicago to the peony fields of the Peterson Nursery. Mr. Ward spent a portion of Saturday, June 6, in Chicago, having come down from the Michigan woods, above Saginaw, for the special purpose of going over the peony situation with Mr. Peterson, and looking over his fields. This week the members of the American Association of Nurserymen, by twos and threes and half dozens, are inspecting the Peterson stock, and especially the peonies, on their way to or from the Milwaukee convention.

To the REVIEW Mr. Ward said that in the last year he has rather lost touch with the carnation, the peony and the nursery business through having to spend a large part of his time looking after his interests in the lumber district of Michigan. The sale of the estate in which Mr. Ward is concerned is scheduled to take place June 15 and on its prompt consummation depends Mr. Ward's presence at the peony convention at Ithaca, N. Y., June 19 and 20. Mr. Ward says it will take perhaps another year to close up his affairs in Michigan, and after that he purposes to secure relaxation by diverting his energies to his hobbies, which are the carnation and the peony.

As for the peony: "Our sales increase each year and I haven't yet met anyone who was not fond of the flower," said Mr. Ward. "There is no other plant or flower that has such a wide range of usefulness; in landscape work and on home grounds it will be much more extensively used, while it is so important a cut flower that in its season it crowds all others and takes the center of the stage. Every florist who grows cut stock for his own trade will find he must have his field of peonies, and when his customers see them in bloom they will buy plants at good prices."

At the Peterson Nursery there is a row of Festiva Maxima, more than 500 plants 5 years old. They are in rich, deep, well drained soil and stand four and a half feet high. Aside from those in the trade, there are hundreds of other visitors during peony time, for it is the practice to keep open house at Peterson Manor, as the society editor calls it, during that fortnight. There is never a hint of business, but, if the visitor has grounds at home, the sight of that magnificent row of Festiva Maxima is pretty sure to cause inquiry for the order clerk. Anyway, the visitor is given a couple of blooms to take home. "That lands them every time," said Mr. Peterson. "After they have had them in water a day, and the flowers have attained their full development, they simply can't resist; and when they telephone for some plants of 'the big white,' of course they take a pink."

"What pink do you put in the same class as Festiva Maxima?" was a natural question.

"Well, there are few better peonies, of any color, than Mons. Jules Elie. It is clear flesh pink, massive shape, extra large, free, early and in every way a fit companion for Festiva Maxima. It is good either for the garden or for cutting."

"But there is more than one good pink," continued Mr. Peterson. "Livingstone is an extra fine late pink, a rich, clear shade, a variety of the highest class. Delicatissima is one of the best cut flower sorts. It is large, clear pink, exceptionally fragrant and a strong grower, so it can be cut with long stems."

Giganthea is one Mr. Ward thinks well of. It is a beautifully clear shade of light pink, full centered and a specially fine thing for cut flower work. "The only criticism of it," said Mr. Peterson, who has worked up quite a stock, "is that it is slow to multiply. It was sent out by a Holland firm as Giganthea, but it is the earlier French introduction, La Martine, renamed."

"Before we get too far away from the subject of whites, I want to say a word for Mme. de Verneville. It is certainly one of the most beautiful sorts we have. Its form is not at all like Festiva Maxima, being globular and regular. It is pure white, with a faint blush tint in the center; delicate, early, free and exceptionally fragrant. In my opinion it is worth special mention in every dealer's list."

To go back to the pinks, Alexandriana is one that looks like an exalted Giganthea; but if you chance to pick up a price-list you find Alexandriana the cheaper. Evidently it combines rapid growth and divisibility with its other good qualities.

At Peterson Nursery no pretense is made of introducing new sorts, but every new name leads to an order for stock for trial. If it proves to be an old sort, renamed, it gives a line on the party who supplied the stock; if it proves an improvement, stock is worked up; if no improvement, the department store buyer gets the whole lot of plants. In this way over 400 varieties are being grown, but only a few score are in quantity, with more of a couple dozen sorts than of all the other 400 combined.

The mixed nomenclature of the peony doesn't worry Mr. Peterson as much as it does some people. He buys large quantities of stock in Europe and from American dealers, but does not sell a plant until it has flowered on his own grounds. "If every large American grower would follow that practice, each would know exactly what he was doing and all dealers could buy with certainty they would get what they wanted and could resell with confidence."

Speaking of dealers, "We have had more inquiries than usual for price-lists," said Mr. Peterson, "and I look for a larger business in peonies this season than last. Many of the inquiries are from florists who are planting for their own cutting; others are from florists who take orders for September planting, and others come from nurserymen who find the demand is turning to the finer sorts and that they have got to clean up the mixed lots and the common varieties and plant or buy for their trade what the people want—the best, without much regard for price."

"As to whether it pays the florist to grow peonies to sell the plants, the good sorts, that cost $1 a plant, will after two years' growth be profitable if the divisions are sold even as low as 50 cents."

Recent visitors to Peterson Nursery have found that the peony show was really a secondary spectacle compared to the display of irises. As a show of color, nothing finer could be imagined. Irises are rapidly gaining favor for garden use. Some of the best are:

Sans Souci, standard golden yellow, falls crimson brown; the brightest yellow there is.

Harlequin Milanais, standard white flaked violet, falls rich violet reticulated with white; large, orchid-like.

Mme. Chereau, tallest, white, elegantly frilled with violet.

Speciosa, standard lavender, falls dark reddish purple; exceptionally fragrant.

Gertrude is a beautiful violet blue. This is a Peterson seedling.

AT BLOOMINGTON, ILL.

My peonies have made a simply glorious show this season and have attracted a great deal of attention. The idea that the popularity of the peony is on the wane is simply ridiculous. There may be a glut of the cut flowers in certain wholesale markets in the height of the season, but the peony is, and always will be, the people's flower. It is eminently adapted to decorating the graves of the nation's heroes, and at Memorial day has a place no other flower can fill at this season. My Memorial day demand was immense and taxed my best efforts to fill.

My grounds have been the wonder and admiration of the city, while the peonies were in flower. My peonies are on a southeastern slope, 750 feet from east to west, and rising thirteen feet in 200, with the Bloomington and Normal electric cars running along the lower side. The frequent rains in May, and the bright sun between showers, gave the plants a growth and the flowers a brilliance of color I have never seen before. It was a veritable exhibition for all who passed and the show did much to add to the popularity of the peony in this vicinity.

THE PEONY CONVENTION.

As announced in the Review last week, the sixth annual meeting and fifth annual exhibition of the American Peony Society will be held June 19 and 20 at the State College of Agriculture, Department of Horticulture, Cornell University, Ithaca, N. Y., and all consignments of flowers for exhibition must be so addressed. All entries must be sent direct to the manager of the exhibition, Leon D. Batchelor, Ithaca, so as to reach him at least two days before the exhibition.

The premium list is practically the same as last year and has been sent to members by Secretary A. H. Fewkes, of Newton Highlands, Mass. In a circular accompanying it he says in part:

"It is earnestly desired that all members who can will attend this meeting. The prospects for a successful meeting are good. The weather conditions have been favorable for the best development of the peony, and advices from Ithaca are to the effect that the plants in the test collections have wintered well and give promise of abundant bloom. The supplementary collection of selected varieties which was added last fall should make the collections doubly interesting, placing as it does the cream of the collections of various growers side by side in such a manner that the varieties may be easily verified.

"Prof. Whetzel, as chairman of the committee on diseases of the peony, will make a report for that committee which undoubtedly will be of much interest.

"To those who did not attend the meeting last year it may be said that all who did, have a pleasant remembrance of the hospitable manner in which the society was received, and in all probability are looking forward to meeting again where so much of interest is at hand, and where pleasure and profit may be combined. It will pay you to go and see what has been done and what is under way in the interest of better conditions in the peony business of the country. The regular business meeting will be held at 3 p. m. on the first day, June 19.

"The test collections are now in the immediate charge of Leon D. Batchelor and he requests all members and others who issue catalogues or price lists of peonies to favor him with copies of them if they have not already done so."

EUROPEAN NOTES.

The principal horticultural exhibition of the year in France was opened in Paris May 23. The extensive range of buildings devoted to the show was full of interest from end to end, and the art of arranging, in which the French excel, was simply perfection.

Novelties were not very abundant, but a few awards were made, among the most notable of which were the following: Lupinus polyphyllus Moerheimi, raised by B. Ruys, of the Moerheim Nurseries, Dedemsvaart, Holland, and exhibited by L. Ferard, Paris; Clematis Mlle. Yvette, a mauve flowered variety of the lanuginosa type, exhibited by Houry & Sons, Orleans; Zonal Pelargonium Dagata, a vigorous variety, with large semi-double pink flowers and trusses five inches across, from Andre Charmet, of Lyon.

A grand feature of the show was the great display by Vilmorin, Andrieux & Co., of Paris. Part of this exhibit consisted of a rock garden, with a stream of water trickling among the stones and verdure. Another section was composed of banks of annuals, in which stocks, nasturtiums, aquilegias, schizanthus, etc., were prominent, flanked by sweet peas in pots, with all the most popular varieties in fine form; probably the largest display of sweet peas ever seen in France at a flower show. Vilmorin's exhibit will help to extend the culture of sweet peas in France.

G. & A. Clark, of Dover, England, also exhibited a fine table of vases of sweet peas, especially good Henry Eckford, St. George, Helen Lewis and Helen Pierce.

Massive groups of rhododendrons, many of the plants eight feet in diameter, were exhibited by the famous growers, Moser & Sons and Croux & Sons. Hundreds of plants from two feet to eight feet in diameter were exhibited by each.

Aug. Dessert, of Chenonceaux, had a busy time among the peonies. He put up a fine collection and their popularity was apparent from the hosts of admiring visitors who plied the attendants with questions. In herbaceous peonies, La Fiancee, pure white, in the bud resembling large Niphetos roses, was prominent; also Sarah Bernhardt, a blush pink. In tree peonies, Athlete, an immense rosy pink flower; Comtesse de Tudor, blush, and Comte de Flandre, blush, caught the eye. In Japanese, Auguste Dessert, a single rose colored flower, and Lakme, a gigantic single white, were popular.

Fine beds of roses in pots, of such varieties as Mme. Norbert Levavasseur, Baby Rambler, Mrs. Cutbush, etc., were pretty features. By the way, Norbert Levavasseur (of Levavasseur & Sons, Ussy), who was present, received the warm congratulations of many friends on his election to the office of mayor of Boulogne, where he resides.

W. Atlee Burpee was among the visitors, and in his opinion the grandest exhibits were the rhododendrons and Vilmorin's display, regarding which he spoke in terms of the highest praise.

CARNATION NOTES.—WEST.

Preparing for Next Season.

With Memorial day past and gone and the annual school commencements soon over, the demand for carnation blooms will soon be on the wane. As long as the asters are not plentiful, there will, of course, be a fair demand for light-colored blooms, but all the darker shades can well be dispensed with at any time now. This applies especially to the wholesale grower. The retail grower can, of course, make good use of any kind of a fair bloom in funeral work all through the summer.

So the next good thing on tap is getting the beds emptied, repaired and refilled, ready to replant for next season. The time to begin this work is just as soon after the old plants are useless as it is possible to get at it. To put it off a month or more just because you may not wish to plant in early is not a wise thing to do, as it cannot possibly gain you anything, while, on the other hand, it might cause you considerable loss of time if you happen to find, unexpectedly, a few benches that need rebuilding. This repairing of benches nearly always consumes more time than one figures on at the beginning and, in fact, it is frequently the cause of late planting and a consequent loss of considerable of the early season's crop of blooms.

To refill the beds early does not necessarily mean that you must replant early, but it does mean that you will be able to plant whenever you wish to do so. If you are in the habit of planting in late, let me urge you to plant a part of your carnations early this season. Get them on the benches by July 15 and see whether you will not be pleased with the results. I will have more to say at the proper time about the lifting and caring for the plants after housing, but get your beds ready so you can plant any time you want to.

Semi-solid Beds.

If you have heretofore been using raised benches altogether, and you find some that need rebuilding this summer, I would like to prevail upon you to give the semi-solid bed, such as we now use exclusively, a fair trial in a limited way and see whether you will not want more of them. I am not prepared to give you any figures on the cost of construction and maintenance of the two styles of beds, nor of the number of blooms cut and the comparative quality. All I can say is this: We tried the two styles side by side in the same houses and planted to the same varieties, and we were so well pleased with these beds that we are installing no more raised beds for growing carnations.

Now, do not get the idea that this is simply a hobby with us, as it is not. It is a matter of dollars and cents. If we could get better results from the raised benches we certainly would install them, and whenever we run across a style of bench or bed that beats the one we now use, we will certainly change to that style. The old saying, "The proof of the pudding is in the eating thereof," is well applied in this case. Theories and opinions count for nothing in the face of actual facts, as worked out by personal experience.

The construction of the semi-solid beds is simple enough and I have described it in these columns before. Build up your side walls from the ground with whatever material you choose, and to whatever height you wish. We make ours out of wood, using red cedar posts 2x4, set in the ground about eighteen inches deep and four feet apart. We use pecky cypress boards, 1x12, for the sides. These boards can be set up from the ground fully two inches if coarse filling material is used along the sides, thus making the bed fourteen inches high. This is then filled up with cinders from our boilers to within four inches from the top, leaving the balance for soil, etc. If you use concrete—which is all the rage these days—for the sides, you can build them any height you want them. We find, however, that twelve to eighteen inches is the best all-round height. It is high enough to be worked well and will use up a big lot of filling material, too, besides being less liable to push the sides out than where the sides are two feet or more.

The only thing I will ask of you, in case you decide to install one of these beds, is that you build it as described above, and give it a fair location in the house. Do not put it where a raised bench never grew good stock, as one of our acquaintances once did, and do not use old bench soil and sand, etc., for filling, as the same person did. We have found nothing so good for filling as cinders.

Refilling the Benches.

But to get back to filling the beds for planting. Be sure the beds or benches will hold up the full season. Before filling in the soil, be sure you clean them well and give a coat of hot lime wash. Especially is this desirable if you were troubled with stem-rot this season. We spread a scant inch of manure at the bottom of the bench before filling in the soil. Either cattle or horse manure will do, providing it is old enough not to heat. Then spread on the soil and make it level with the sides of the bench. In planting it will be packed down enough to allow for watering and later on for mulching. Break up all the lumps as you bring in the soil, as carnations like a well pulverized soil to work in.

We have always, heretofore, used a fair amount of bone meal at planting time, believing that it benefited the growth of the plants. Professor Galloway, however, asserts that bone meal does not improve the crop in any way and that it is useless, and money thrown away, to apply bone to the soil. A prominent carnation grower related to me a similar experience with this much used article the past season. So we will make some experiments this season along that line, to determine whether bone meal is as indispensable as we formerly considered it. The growers of this country spend many thousands of dollars on ground bone every season and it would be a pity if this had been done unnecessarily and without any return for it.

If you do not plant the beds for some time after they are filled, do not keep the soil very moist, but do not allow it to become dust-dry either. Neither is good for it. A. F. J. BAUR.

MAY-FLOWERING TULIPS.

The name May-flowering tulips is very misleading; the title is very well in Europe, but it will not do in this country, at least not in Virginia. Our so-called May-flowering tulips were well over before Easter. The Darwins dragged on a week or two after, but were finished before May.

A writer, speaking of an exhibition of tulips, says Margaret and Picotee were both shown under one name. Another variety, labeled Beauty of America, came nearer the type. Now, the only tulip likely to confound one is White Queen, and it is evident this was the one, but it is not Picotee shaped. Moreover, the latter would proclaim itself after three days in water, by turning almost pink.

The same writer says Bouton d'Or and Golden Crown showed up well. Now, although both are splendid commercial varieties, they are not much on the exhibition table. He mentions Gretchen as being very fine. Now, in all he mentions but six sorts. Where were Mrs. Moon (syn. Gesneriana Lutea), Pink Beauty, Inglescombe Pink, Striped Beauty, Parisian Yellow, etc., none of which gets a notice? These should have been seen, even if too high-priced as yet for commerce.

Did the display include Darwins? We presume not. This being so, we would like to give a prize next year for the best twelve of one variety shown.

O. W. D'Alcorn.

ANNUAL PINK LUPINES.

These useful annuals are well adapted for indoor culture and can easily be had in bloom for Christmas. The illustration herewith does not show by any means the best spikes; much finer ones can be produced under bench culture. The seed from which the flowers were cut at Christmas was sown in small pots the first week in September, one or two seeds being placed in each pot. The plants were kept in a coldframe and later in a cold house, just clear of freezing, being placed in a night temperature of 50 degrees a month or so before the flowers were cut. They were grown in boxes containing six inches of compost.

Anyone desiring a pleasing variety of annuals to grow under glass should try lupines. Sown in a bench in a house kept in winter at 45 degrees at night, they will make sturdy plants and produce fine spikes. Four months from seed sowing to flowering is ample. The flowers last well in water and make a desirable addition to midwinter flowers. Of the many shades cultivated, the pink colored one is the most effective.

IN HAWAII.

Jared G. Smith, special agent in charge of the government experiment station at Honolulu, writes as follows of the trade interests in Hawaii:

"The flower business of the islands is largely in the hands of Hawaiians and Japanese. Carnations, violets and asters flower almost continuously, especially at elevations above 1,000 feet. The Honolulu market is well supplied with flowers, such as they are, but a number of florists find it profitable to bring considerable quantities of the finer classes of cut flowers in cold storage from San Francisco. The opportunity is open in the production of the finer types and strains of cut flowers, ferns, greenhouse plants and ornamentals, as in the case of vegetables of improved types.

"Besides the opportunities for florists, there are openings for the establishment of nurseries to supply fruit, shade and forest trees. There is no commercial nursery and no local seed house in this territory."

WOOD PRESERVATION.

What Wood Preservation Means.

The cost of wood is today a big item to everyone who must use timber where it is likely to decay. How to reduce the expense of timbers which must constantly be replaced has become a vital problem. The kinds of timber used in contact with the soil are becoming scarcer and scarcer and their prices higher and higher. Long misuse of the forest has brought its sure result. Even with the most efficient management it would be a long time before the supply of the best timbers would increase in quantity or decrease in price.

There are two ways in which the situation may be met. One is to prolong the life of the forest by wise use; the other is to prolong the life of timbers in service by treating them with some preservative.

It is easy to see that if the length of time timbers can be used is doubled, only half as much timber will be required as before and only one-half as much money will need to be spent in the purchase of timber. This is the chief gain in treating wood with preservatives. Yet there is another and important one. Many woods, which for a long time were considered almost worthless, can be treated and made to last as long as the scarcer and more expensive kinds. This of course means that the consumer will have the choice of a much greater number of woods than he had before and at less cost.

Wood preservation, then, prolongs the life of timbers in use, reduces their cost, and gives to the user a wider choice of woods than ever before.

Methods of preservation must be varied for different localities and different kinds of wood, and the U. S. Forest Service has issued several publications which deal with the problems presented in different regions. These publications and detailed information can be had upon application to the Forester, at Washington.

What Decay Is.

The decay of a plant body, such as wood, is not an inorganic process like the rusting of iron or the crumbling of stone, but is due to the activities of low forms of plant life called bacteria and fungi. Bacteria are among the simplest of all forms of life, often consisting of but a single cell, microscopic in size. Sometimes several such cells may be attached to each other, and so form a thread or filament. Usually they are colorless, and multiply by the division of the parent cell into other cells, which, in turn, divide again.

Fungi, although much more complicated than bacteria, are also low in the scale of creation when compared with familiar flowering plants and shrubs. They consist merely of tiny threads or hyphæ, which are collectively known as the mycelium. In many of the higher forms of fungi the threads grow together to form compact masses of tissue. Familiar examples of these forms are the toadstools, which grow on damp, rotting logs, and the "punks," or "brackets," on the trunks of trees in the forest.

The causes of decay in wood, however, are not these fruiting bodies themselves. Spores, very primitive substitutes for seed, which are borne in the countless compartments into which the under surfaces of the fruiting bodies are sometimes divided, are produced in infinite number, and are so fine that they can be distinguished only by the microscope. When seen in bulk they appear as the finest dust. Like dust, they are carried by the wind and strike all portions of the surrounding objects. Few species of fungi successfully attack healthy living trees, and only a comparatively small number can attack and destroy wood. Yet the spores of some find a lodging in dead portions of a tree or in cut timber, and, if the wood is moist and in the right condition for the spore to grow, it germinates and sends out a thin, film-like white thread, which, by repeated branching, penetrates the entire structure of the wood. These are the real agents of decay.

This is not the only way that a fungus can enter a sound stick of timber; for if a good stick is lying close to a rotting one, the mycelium may grow over or through the moist ground and so reach the sound stick, which it immediately attacks. Sometimes, too, when a tree is cut it already has a fungus growing in its wood. If the fungus happens to be a true parasite—that is, if it can grow only in living tissues—it will die when the tree is felled; but if it has been accustomed to growing in the heartwood of the tree, which is practically dead, it may continue to live and develop even after the tree has been sawed into timber.

Wood is composed of minute cells. The chief material of the cell-walls is a substance called cellulose, and around this there are incrusted many different organic substances known collectively as lignin. Most of the wood-destroying fungi attack only the lignin; others attack the cellulose alone, while a third class destroy all parts of the wood structure. The lignin and the cellulose are dissolved by certain substances secreted in the fungi, and thus serve as food for the fungus growth. In this way the fungi can develop until they extend throughout every portion of the timber. After a time the amount of fiber changed into food and assimilated by the fungus causes the wood to become discolored. Discoloration may also be produced by pigments in the fungus or secreted by it. Finally so much of the wood fiber is eaten away or changed in composition that its strength is greatly diminished, the texture becomes brittle and disconnected, and the wood is said to be "rotten."

But food is not the only thing that a fungus requires for its growth and development. It must also have heat, air and moisture. If any one of these is lacking the fungus can not develop. The necessary heat is supplied by almost every climate, and it is only in rare cases, as under water or deep under the surface of the ground, that air can be excluded from the timber. Of the four requirements, therefore, two are beyond control. It is only by depriving the fungi of food or moisture that the destruction they cause can be prevented.

GREIVELDING'S STOCK.

N. Greivelding, of Merrill, Wis., sends the photograph from which the accompanying illustration is prepared, with the following note:

"I send you under separate cover a picture of the new Hydrangea arborescens grandiflora alba, because I read in the paper some time ago that some florist wanted to know if they could be had in bloom for Decoration day. This picture was taken May 28, and behind the hydrangea are white dahlias, and the plants hanging down are Fuchsia Trailing Green."

OBITUARY.

Robert B. Graves.

Robert B. Graves, 88 years of age, the well-known florist, died June 6, at Northampton, Mass., after a short illness, from old age. Mr. Graves was born April 2, 1820, on the old Clark place near where the Norwood hotel is now located and his long life has been spent in Bridge street, Northampton. Nearly seventy-five years ago he moved to his present home. He married Miss Maria D. Wright, of Huntington, and they celebrated their golden wedding a few years ago. Besides his wife, he leaves two sons, Augustus B. and Irving R. Graves, of Northampton, and one daughter, Mrs. Charles Edwards, of Torrington, Conn. The death of Mr. Graves removes one of the oldest residents of the city. He had been a familiar personage upon the streets for many years and until recently had been able to go to Main street every day. The funeral was held at the house, 421 Bridge street, Sunday afternoon, June 7, and was private.

J. Owen Hanvey.

J. Owen Hanvey, of Lynchburg, Va., died May 26 and was buried at Leesburg May 28, there being a large floral display at the obsequies. Mr. Hanvey was a druggist, but he had a floral department and did a large business in cut flowers and designs and was widely known to the trade in his section of the country. A brother will continue the business.

James Shanley.

The death of James Shanley, Brooklyn, N. Y., is reported. He was one of the oldest and most highly esteemed members of the profession in the city of churches.

George Frederick Chandler.

George Frederick Chandler died at his home in South Lancaster, Mass., May 30, after several years of failing health and waning strength.

Mr. Chandler was the son of Nathaniel Chandler and was born in Petersham in 1882. When 6 years of age, in 1828, with his father's family he removed to Lancaster and had resided there during all his subsequent life of 80 years. His first residence was in the so-called Ware house, north of his second residence, in which he lived most of his life, and where he died. His father passed away in 1852. On September 22, 1847, he married Miss Susan Elizabeth Buss, who died April 6, 1902. Since 1843 he had followed the occupation of a florist, commencing the business when there was no other engaged in that line of work in the vicinity. He was one of the two surviving members of the original Lancaster Odd Fellows' lodge and had held the office of Noble Grand of the lodge.

Three brothers and two sisters have preceded the deceased into the other world: Samuel Ward Chandler, who died in Philadelphia; Charles Chandler, who died in New Bradford, and John C. Chandler of Lancaster; Catherine, the wife of Prof. Theophilus Parsons of Cambridge, and Mary G., the widow of Dr. John Ware of Boston, who long lived in the old Nathaniel Chandler house and died but a few years since.

Four children survive: Elizabeth H., Marion W., Mrs. Caroline C. Avery, and Frederick Lincoln Chandler, all residing in Lancaster.

In Mr. Chandler's death, Lancaster loses another of her long-time residents and esteemed citizens. He had a wide acquaintance in the vicinity and many friends regret his passing on.

NEGAUNEE, MICH.—Work will be begun soon on the greenhouses which are to be erected by the Cleveland Cliffs Iron Co. on the plat south of the Union depot.

WHEELING, W. VA.—All the florists in this part of the country sold up close for Decoration day. The demand steadily increases and many vegetable forcers and market gardeners are turning their attention to plants and flowers.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

Incorporated by Act of Congress March 4, '01

Officers for 1908: President, F. H. Traendly, New York; vice-president, George W. McClure, Buffalo; secretary, Willis N. Rudd, Morgan Park, Ill.; treasurer, H. B. Beatty, Pittsburg.
Annual convention, Niagara Falls, August 18 to 21, 1908.
First National Flower Show, Chicago, November 9 to 15, 1908; W. F. Kasting, Buffalo, chairman.

At the recent Temple Show at London White Dorothy Perkins rose was highly spoken of.

Is there any incongruity in "Requiescat in Pace" over the door of a mausoleum and a life size horse in flowers in front of it?

A florist at Oklahoma City says Decoration day business was three times as heavy as last year—and it wasn't bad anywhere in 1907.

The legislative committee of the S. A. F. will shortly become a most important one, for both political parties are pledged to revise the tariff.

Bedding stock has sold well this season. Almost all localities report the supply as being practically cleaned up, and where there is a surplus it is going out rapidly to those who are short.

Among the plants allied to the hibiscus and especially worthy of trial is Lavatera trimestris, a very free flowering annual, with pink and white blossoms which are fine for bouquets. Callirhoes are small native plants, with showy orange or red flowers. C. involucrata is the best known, having large crimson flowers, dwarf and spreading in habit. It flowers all summer.

C. W. Ward says that the replacing of the old, narrow houses at the Cottage Gardens with high, light, airy structures forty-five feet wide, as was done last season, has been fully justified by the season's results. As compared with the same space in the old houses, the cut has been double from the very beginning of the season.

Reduced Rates for the Convention.

The Trunk Line Association, covering points in the states of New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland and part of Virginia and West Virginia, has granted a rate of one fare and three-fifths for the round trip on the certificate plan to those desiring to attend the convention. Other associations have not as yet granted any concessions.

Other particulars will be announced later. W. N. Rudd, Sec'y.

STILL BETTER.

The Review grows better and better; we can't get along without it.—L. C. Porter, Racine, Wis., June 1, 1908.

The Review gets better every issue and we don't want to miss an issue.—J. G. Angel, Oklahoma City, Okla., June 1, 1908.

THE NEXT WEEK'S WEATHER.

Washington, D. C.—The weather bureau issued its forecast for the week June 9, as follows:

"A barometric depression that will appear over the Rocky mountain districts on Wednesday will move slowly eastward over the plains states on Thursday, cross the central valleys on Friday and Saturday and reach the Atlantic coast on Saturday or Sunday. Local rains and a slight rise in temperature will attend the advance of the rain area, and following its passage there will be a day or two, the beginning of next week, of lower temperature from the north central valleys to the middle and north Atlantic coast."

CHICAGO.

The Great Central Market.

Intense heat June 7 and 8 did a great deal of injury to stock and shut off a large part of the demand for it. During the week preceding there had been abundant supplies, but the weather was cool and stock of fair quality, but with the hot days there came an avalanche of open, soft flowers for which no use could be found. Few carnations will ship in such weather and a large part of the roses are too open to be valuable to the retail florists.

The week opened with a good demand for the seasonable specialties. Commencements are on throughout the country and there is the usual call for material for wedding decorations. Valley has been one of the best selling items. The shipping business has been a large factor, but it has not called for many peonies as yet; there seems everywhere to be a local supply, but this will soon be over in all save the northern districts. Sweet peas have sold in large quantities, but the demand has been exclusively for the best, and the poor stock, of which there are many thousands, sells slowly. The indoor peas are rapidly nearing the end of their season.

There is call for first-class roses, but these are hard to supply. Richmond is in good form and Killarney also in fair shape. With Kaiserin, these are at present the best selling varieties. Short roses have little value.

There is a fair demand for Beauties, but these also are abundant, especially the long-stemmed ones, and prices are down to midsummer level, with stock of good quality.

The receipts of carnations at the first of this week were about at the top notch, with quality at the lowest. These and open roses could not be cleaned up, even at the street salesman's figure. He would only take the best, even when permitted to name the price, and the waste has been large. Many growers already are beginning to throw out their stock preparatory to replanting, it no longer paying to run the houses.

The hot weather made the peonies pop open so fast that the duration of the local crop was shortened considerably. The market is full of open flowers, which will neither do to ship nor to store. The result is that this grade has little value, for only a portion can be sold. It appears that not so many peonies are being stored this year as last. It has not always proved a profitable speculation and this year the condition of the stock is less favorable than usual. If peonies cannot be cut and put into the cold rooms in the right stage, the stock is not worth storage charges when it comes out. Not only is a great deal of the stock poor this season, but the buds are opening so fast they cannot be cut until too far developed, and the owners will not take chances on storing. There may be in this a prospect for better prices for the really good peonies, and for other good flowers for the balance of the month.

A number of the wholesale houses are loaded up with Easter lilies and prices are low, if a quantity can be used. Several growers have crops just in and there will be lilies in plenty for some weeks.

The growers of greens had a poor May, partly because the spring opening decorations were not as elaborate as usual. They are, however, getting a better return for June; the weddings and commencements are calling for large quantities of smilax and asparagus. All greens are abundant and unlimited quantities can be supplied if twenty-four hours' notice is given. New ferns are arriving, while there are yet quantities of last year's crop.

Club Meeting.

The monthly meeting of the Florists' Club was held at the Union restaurant on the evening of June 4, with a better attendance than at any so far held there. It was decided to hold the annual picnic July 19 at Morton Grove. George Asmus and T. E. Waters are the active managers. It was reported that the details of closing up the purchase of the property at Joliet, selected by Mrs. Hartshorne, had been completed. Word was brought of the serious condition of A. I. Simmons, who has been ill for nearly a year and who is now in a sanitarium.

There were several members present who had not attended a meeting in a long time and these, with some of the new recruits, held the floor during the recess for refreshments.

The adjournment was until the first Thursday evening in September.

Various Notes.

John Evert, at Rogers Park, still has cucumbers in part of his houses, for the cucumber market continues satisfactory. Lettuce growers, however, are finding the market as overstocked and as dull as are the carnation growers. Mr. Evert is planting his houses with mums as fast as the vegetables are cleared out, and a large number of vegetable growers north of town are following his example.

N. C. Moore & Co. are bending all energies this week to cutting their peonies. The tight stock is going into cold storage.

Bassett & Washburn say that June thus far has been an excellent month with them and the orders booked for this week were heavier than were shipped last week.

Kennicott Bros. Co. received auratum lilies June 6. When auratums become an item of stock, summer is surely not far away.

C. W. McKellar says there is a good demand for cattleyas. Mendellii is in good crop just now, but other varieties are somewhat scarce.

One wholesaler dumped over 200,000 cape jasmine buds June 8, and confesses to being nearly $300 out on express charges.

Peter Reinberg had the largest day's cut in his history June 8. It took two wagons to bring down the morning's cut that afternoon.

Poehlmann Bros. Co. says the shipping trade is good, but local business light. The shipping trade invariably calls for the best stock to be had.

Scheiden & Schoos are reported to be practically discarding Enchantress this season. There can be no doubt that better results would have been had all around if fewer Enchantress and more of the good sorts in other colors had been grown last season.

J. A. Budlong did a big business last week with the Peterson peonies, and also this week, although at much reduced prices, because of the big increase in supply when the hot days came.

Anton Streuski is investing $13,000 in a range of seven greenhouses at 53 Touhy avenue.

E. C. Amling has been doing a big business with sweet peas in the last fortnight. He has several growers of this specialty and has sold as much as $80 for one man in one day.

W. H. Hilton expects to go to Colorado about the end of June to spend the summer.

In last week's REVIEW there was a note under the Pittsburg heading of special interest to Chicago. It read: "Mr. and Mrs. Gustave Ludwig have announced the engagement of their daughter, Miss Lena Ludwig, to Victor F. Bergman, of Chicago. The engagement will terminate in a June wedding." Mr. Bergman is one of E. Wienhoeber's right hand men.

At Klehm's Nurseries work is under high pressure this week. This is one of the places where the handling of peonies is thoroughly understood. The heat has made rapid work necessary. At present the stock is being divided between Kennicott Bros. Co., Percy Jones, and cold storage.

N. J. Wietor says that the most important thing the craft can undertake is to get the use of flowers sanctioned at the local school closings. There is no question but that the ban placed on flowers a few years ago has cost the trade many thousands of dollars each June.

E. H. Hunt reports that the violet season closed this year May 25, which is several weeks earlier than last year.

The A. L. Randall Co. says the call for such stock as can be used for weddings and school work is good, but that it is difficult to clean up on the grades of material that won't ship.

Vaughan & Sperry say that the increased demand for bone indicates that the growers generally are replanting earlier this year than usual.

Among the week's visitors were A. L. Glazer, Dubuque, Ia.; E. H. Hitchcock, Glenwood, Mich.; Will Graff, Columbus, O., on his way to West Baden; A. E. Kunderd, Fort Wayne, Ind.; J. A. Evans., Richmond, Ind.

CHENOA, ILL.—The business of H. W. Jontry has been reorganized and is now conducted by M. C. Jontry and J. F. Jontry, under the name of Jontry Bros. They say that business was good during the last season and everything was cleaned out at Decoration day.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

This week opened with a hot wave which was entirely unnecessary, as the cut flower market was in a wilted condition already and the burden of excessive shipments is more than it can well carry. There is no let-up in the supply of anything but white orchids. They are in demand for the weddings, which average dozens daily in New York and Brooklyn. Price was no object Monday. A prominent retailer on Broadway offered several times the quoted rate, but not a flower was obtainable. The retailers are surely busy. With flowers so reasonable there is every excuse for liberal and elaborate work, and in some cases there is no limit put upon the cost. Warendorff utilized immense quantities of white peonies and field daisies at the wedding in Grace church June 10. Never were peonies so abundant nor so low in price. Immense lots were selling Monday as low as $20 per thousand, and this value included the leading varieties.

Carnations are without end, apparently. One of the Twenty-eighth street wholesalers tells me he sold 50,000 Saturday. In thousand lots, after a day of residence here, they got as low as 25 cents per hundred. The street men offer them at 10 cents a dozen. If it were not for this outlet, they would dam the river of business completely. Even the best of the novelties do not go above $2 per hundred, and novelties are few. The regular price for the selected stock is $1 per hundred and even this, in thousand lots, has been cleaned out at $5 a thousand. Hanig, of Brooklyn, had two wagon-loads of flowers Monday. Several of the Brooklyn florists deal in similar quantities, and John Weir can be depended on by the city of churches to keep it sweet every day in the year.

Lilies are still abundant and prices have not yet advanced above the low ebb that prevailed after Easter. Valley has advanced, thanks to the bride's bouquet, and the finest grade has been selling at $3 per hundred. Gladioli are here, too, and the supply will grow daily in volume from now on. Lilac has passed and the sweet pea flood has narrowed to a rivulet. The lethargy of 90 degrees is over all.

Club Meeting.

An excellent attendance signalized the final meeting of the Florists' Club for the season. The transportation committee recommended the selection of the D., L. & W. R. R. as the most desirable road for the conventionists. A special train is provided for, if an attendance of 100 is guaranteed. The train will leave at 10 a. m. Monday, August 17, and reach Niagara Falls at 9 p. m. The fare, including return ticket, will be $11.57. Two meals will be served on the way.

The outing committee distributed its program and tickets and reported most satisfactory progress; $262 worth of advertising and $256.50 in prizes already indicate a great success.

Will Rickards was accorded the thanks of the club for his splendid management of ladies' night.

The gentlemen proposed at the last meeting of the club were elected and John J. Coan was proposed for membership.

Fifty dollars was placed at the service of the transportation committee for current expenses and refreshments on the way to Niagara.

Messrs. O'Mara, Traendly and Butterfield were appointed a committee to draw up resolutions on the death of the mother of Secretary Young. Later these were presented and were a beautiful tribute to the character and lovableness of the esteemed lady.

Messrs. O'Mara, Stewart and Traendly were the committee appointed to draw up the resolutions on the death of William Scott, of Buffalo. These made feeling reference to the universal love that was his heritage and the incalculable value his work has been to floriculture.

The death of James Shanley, of Brooklyn, was announced. He was one of the club's oldest and most valued members and great regret because of his loss was expressed by all. Messrs. Sheridan, Donaldson and Burney were appointed a committee to draw up suitable resolutions.

A vase of Festiva Maxima peony, exhibited by Alex. E. Hogg, of Brooklyn, received the thanks of the club. Harry Turner, gardener to Howard Gould, made a novel and meritorious display of Malmaison carnations, the light pink, Calypso, and the deep pink, Mrs. Trelawney. These varieties were imported two years ago by Mrs. Turner and have never before been on exhibition. The exhibit well merited the cultural certificate.

The final delight of the evening was a lecture by George V. Nash on "Ornamental Shrubs," illustrated by colored stereopticon views. An interesting discussion followed Mr. Nash's lecture.

Various Notes.

The outing of the Plant Growers' Association, June 25, will whet the appetites of the Florists' Club members, many of whom are members of both organizations, for the club's outing, July 1, by Steamer Isabel to Witzel's grove on the sound. Arrangements for this are now complete, the program showing nearly $500 in prizes and advertisements. Bowling, baseball, the children's races and dancing, with an evening sail on the sound, should furnish a day of rare enjoyment.

W. G. Badgley, of Chatham, N. J., has purchased a half interest in the Wilson Plant Oil Co. and arrangements have been made for the manufacture of this popular insecticide in larger quantities.

W. E. Marshall has just returned from a successful eastern trip.

John King Duer is spending his vacation with friends at one of the Jersey resorts. J. J. Coan, the manager of his uniquely decorated store on Madison avenue, has a fine summer garden laid out in the court and is making many changes in the store and its conveniences, after what he says has been a satisfactory year.

Myer, at Madison avenue and Fifty-eighth street, illustrates the value of original window effects. He has a fine assortment of turtles, alligators, ducks, frogs and goldfish, with fountain effects and country groupings that draw good crowds every evening.

The joint exhibition of the American Rose Society and the Horticultural Society of New York began Wednesday, June 10, at Bronx park in the Museum building. The attendance promises to be large, the exhibits numerous, and the address of W. C. Barry, of Rochester, will surely be of interest to all. The exhibition will continue until Thursday evening.

June 23 will close the auction season and a big trade sale is announced by W. Elliott & Sons that day at 42 Vesey street, their new store.

John Kral, who is Moore, Hentz & Nash's lieutenant, is on deck again after his long hospital siege. The craft in the Coogan building gave him a hearty reception.

Bobby Schultz is in the market as a traveling representative of any horticultural house that wants a hustler, having rented his rose plant at Madison.

Alex. McConnell is enjoying a two weeks' outing at one of the restful country resorts in Connecticut.

David Clarke's Sons are busy in upper Broadway, with weddings, frequently decorating for half a dozen in a day.

Masur, in Brooklyn, has had several fine wedding decorations since Easter. His aster farm at Rahway, where he makes the summer home of his family, will soon be heard from.

R. G. Wilson, the new president of the Brooklyn Retailers' Association, speaks hopefully of the success of the society and thinks it will soon total 100 members. With his fine, modern greenhouse establishment on Green avenue, and his beautiful store on Fulton street, he is well equipped for the large crop of weddings he reports.

Bonnet & Blake report the best year since they opened their Brooklyn business and find their new store on Livingston street already too small for their growing trade.

M. A. Bowe will summer in the Oranges, but is on deck daily at his headquarters in New York. He has had some notable weddings already since June began, and contemplates a trip to Europe before September.

Bowling.

June 5 closed the contest for the Marshall prizes. The best records were: Manda, 1262; Marshall, 1217; Donaldson, 1192; Traendly, 1062. The box of Havanas went to Manda and the knife to Donaldson. The month of June will end the contest for the Traendly transportation prizes. The best games last Friday were:

| Player. | 1st | 2d | 3d | Av. |
| Manda | 158 | 149 | 208 | 172 |

J. Austin Shaw.

The trustee in the matter of A. J. Fellouris, bankrupt, has filed his final account with the referee, S. W. Dexter, 71 Broadway, where it may be inspected by creditors. At 10 a. m., June 15, the matter will be closed up.

Miss Vivienne Shaw and Harvey K. Thew were married June 4 at the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian church. The bride is a daughter of J. Austin Shaw and the groom a member of the editorial staff of the New York Herald.

The Wertheimer Bros. baseball team defeated the strong team of Smith & Kaufman June 6, at Bronx field, by the score of 9 to 7. The game was very exciting and undecided until the last man was put out. The features were the heavy hitting of Cloughley and M. Cohen and the fine work behind the bat of Hano. The victors have issued a challenge to any team in the silk trade and are prepared to meet all comers.

Plant Growers' Outing.

The New York and New Jersey Association of Plant Growers held an important meeting at the Hotel St. Denis, Broadway and Eleventh street, New York city, June 2, at which a large gathering was present.

The committee which was appointed at the last meeting to arrange for an outing of the association, and which consisted of A. L. Miller, Herman C. Steinhoff, Herman Schoelzel and John Scott, made its report. The association will give its outing June 25, at Terra Marine Inn, Huguenot Park, Staten Island, and the members will meet at the Staten Island ferry, foot of Whitehall street, New York city, at 10:30 a. m. on that day and then proceed by boat, train and automobile to the place of the outing.

The committee has made full arrangements for plenty to eat and drink, music, dancing, games, races, bowling and other sports and pastimes, and it is evident that the association intends to have a day's fun. In order to evade the personal tax on its capital, which has rapidly increased since its incorporation, the association has decided to furnish each of its members with tickets to its outing gratis. It is expected that all members, with their families and friends, will attend and thoroughly enjoy themselves. W. H. Siebrecht, Jr., Sec'y.

The Market.

The wholesale market seems to have fallen back into its old rut, and things were quiet and stock plentiful last week. There was nothing of any note going on among the leading retailers—a few weddings and other social work, but nothing large. Funeral work is about the only thing that kept them going. This week comes the closing of the large schools, and a good business is looked for. With these generally ends the season and society will be looking for cooler places.

The stock is now largely of roses, but poor in quality. Carnations are still good, but the bulk is becoming small. The price for the best does not run over $2 per hundred. Extra fine valley is in the market, and large quantities of sweet peas, but not of the best quality. Plenty of candidum lilies are being sent in, with fair sales. The rest of the stock is made up of a lot of outdoor truck which does not bring much at any time. Peonies from cold storage are still coming in. Greens of all kinds are plentiful.

Various Notes.

Quite a delegation of nurserymen will leave here this week to attend the thirty-third annual convention of the American Association of Nurserymen at Milwaukee. This delegation will be under the watchful eye of Frank Weber, who is known in the Florists' Club as one of the hustlers.

Seed Trade Association, which meets June 23 to 25 in Detroit. Fred Plant, of the Plant Seed Co.; W. Nichols, of the St. Louis Seed Co., and M. Schisler, of the Schisler-Corneli Seed Co., are among the workers for a large attendance.

The early-closing movement will again be taken up by our wholesalers, the same as last year, during the months of July and August, to close the first five days of the week at 5 p. m. and Saturdays at noon. Last year this was much appreciated by the employees.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred C. Weber and their daughter, Adele, in company with the Misses Meinhardt, will leave the latter part of this month for a month's trip west, visiting Yellowstone park and other points of interest. This is purely a pleasure trip after a good business season.

The Egyptian Hustlers' meeting, held the last week at Belleville, made things quite interesting for the florists in that city. The floral parade Friday was one of the features. E. W. Guy, St. Clair Floral Co., Henry Emunds, Adolph Fehr and G. Grossart had their hands full all week, supplying the hustlers with flowers.

The many friends of Robert J. Windler were glad to see him among the buyers in the wholesale district, looking so well after his illness. He says the store was well taken care of in his absence.

The State Board of Agriculture held a three days' session last week at Mountain Grove, Mo. The following officers were elected: President, W. P. Stark; first vice-president, R. L. Hitt; second vice-president, J. J. Chastin; treasurer, T. H. Todd, and secretary, L. C. Howard, of Columbia, Mo.

A. J. Bentzen, of the Bentzen Floral Co., reports that they have the order to furnish the bouquets and decorations for the Yeatman High school, which will be on a larger scale than last year.

The executive committee of the American Apple Growers' Congress met Friday, June 5, at the Southern hotel and arranged for a program for the sixth annual convention. The convention meets here during the month of August. Senator H. M. Dunlap, of Savoy, Ill.; T. H. Todd, of New Franklin, Mo.; W. R. Wilkinson, T. C. Wilson, and Prof. H. C. Irish, of St. Louis, attended the meeting of the board.

Messrs. Schoenle, Smith and Beyer spent a day looking up grounds for the Florists' Club picnic. They selected Normandi park. The date will be Wednesday, July 15. The suburban car line runs to the gate of this park. The conditions are much better than the place last year—fine ball grounds, bowling alleys, dancing hall, plenty of shelter for all. The grounds will be exclusively for the florists and their friends. The exclusive part will be one of the features this year which the members have never enjoyed at former outings. The trustees are now at work preparing a program which will be made attractive for all. A good band will also be one of the features this year. The members can look forward to the best outing the club has yet held.

As per the will of the late Henry Shaw, his garden is open to the public on Sunday only twice a year, the first Sundays in June and September. June 7 16,559 people passed through the gates. The excessive heat and threatening skies kept many away. The cactus house, under the supervision of Mr. Thompson, and the orchid house, in care of Mr. Pring, attracted most of the visitors. The bedding this year is especially attractive; in fact, the garden presented a very handsome appearance. Under the watchful eye of Superintendent H. C. Irish, all the visitors were placed in groups and each with a guide was shown all the points of interest and given an explanation of the merits of the plants.

The Rising Eastern Market.

The June Girl (apt phrase coined by the great Sam) has made a decided impression on the cut flower market. In her honor mother, father, sister, brother and friends, both feminine and masculine, have vied with each other in gathering the choicest floral offerings to win her smile. Weddings and commencements have succeeded each other with a rapidity that gave the florists in our fashionable shops scarcely time to breathe. Ogontz and Bryn Mawr have been succeeded, though not outshone, by a host of smaller commencements, and the weddings, both ultra-fashionable and quiet, have been too numerous to mention.

The result on the market was gratifying insofar as choice cut flowers were concerned. Sweet peas of quality had a tremendous run. Some days they were almost unobtainable, but the supply is gradually increasing, and the demand diminishing. Prices, which were unusually high for the first ten days of June, are now receding steadily.

Beauties have shortened considerably, and prices are advancing for any stock worthy of the name. Valley is fine, and has been in heavy demand. Cattleyas are slightly diminished in quantity. The quality is excellent, the demand quite good.

Kaiserin is in strong supply, and sells fairly well. There are a few good Killarney about. They are in demand when they have size and stem. Brides and Maids are only fair. Liberty is good, but Richmond is falling off badly, except in rare instances.

It is estimated that nearly nine-tenths of the carnations coming into the market are practically worthless. They are too soft when received in the wholesale houses to be offered to the shops, and can only be fakered off at absurd prices when opportunity offers, which is not always.

Lilium Harrisii is to be had, but sells slowly. Lilium candidum has made its appearance.

Peonies are decreasing in quantity, though still fine. Lemoine realized top prices last week. There is not nearly so much disposition to put peonies in cold storage this season as in former years. The difficulty seems to lie in getting the buds into cold storage in the proper stage of development. If they are too far advanced when put away, they are useless on being taken out.

Dagger ferns are selling at absurdly low prices, market figures being maintained only by choice stock. Long strings of Asparagus plumosus have been in fair demand. Smilax is in good supply; the price has fallen slightly.

Indoor sweet peas and gardenias are nearly over.

There have been some excellent shipping orders, especially for Beauties and valley.

The Rose Show.

The June rose show of the Germantown Horticultural Society was largely attended. N. Dubois Miller presided, in the absence of President Heyl. The exhibition of roses, strawberries and sweet peas was large and attractive. John F. Sibson, gardener to Mrs. Thomas McKean, captured first on outdoor roses, from a large field of competitors. Mr. Sibson attributed his success as much to his exhibit being properly staged and labeled as to its quality, some of his competitors getting badly tangled in both respects. One exhibitor, believing that "the more the merrier," had an immense exhibit of medium quality blooms, all mixed up together. The stern judges promptly disqualified this exhibit.

S. Mendelson Meehan's resignation from the executive committee, owing to his appointment on the Poor Board, was accepted with regret. James T. Scott, in his address advocating the acceptance, said that the society could only lend Mr. Meehan to the Poor Board, and must have him back later. Secretary Redles said that to Mr. Meehan the society was indebted for the suggestion of an executive committee, which had been the making of the society.

The Co-operation Paper.

Much comment is heard on the street, both from retailers and wholesalers, concerning the paper read by Arthur A. Niessen at the June meeting of the Florists' Club on "Coöperation Between Retailer and Wholesaler." (You see, I do not dare add, "in times of overproduction.") Samuel S. Pennock, in discussing Mr. Niessen's paper, said that he believes that if the retailers would educate their customers to the idea that at certain times flowers can be had at low prices, they would greatly increase their sales. He heartily commended Mr. Niessen's illustration of strawberries, saying that the public understands perfectly that strawberries can only be had at certain times at low prices, and that at those times they buy freely, not expecting to receive their berries for the same money early or late in the season. Mr. Pennock said he feels that the market has become too large for the retailers to buy carnations, for instance, at $1 per hundred and sell them at 75 cents per dozen, when there is overproduction, and that, were they to give this matter serious consideration, they would greatly increase their own profits and the general welfare by adopting special sales at certain times, or some measures of that nature, to move the surplus.

The general feeling on the street is that at least a portion of the July meeting should be given up to the discussion of Mr. Niessen's paper, which was interrupted by the ending of the business session of the June meeting.

meeting of the Pennsylvania Horticultural Society last week. Mr. Robertson's flowers were fine and borne on unusually long stems.

Nephrolepis Amerpohlii has the honor of being the only American plant to receive a certificate of merit at the centenary exhibition at Ghent, Belgium, this spring.

Among the visitors to this city last week was Mr. Tanner, of the firm of Radcliffe & Tanner, of Richmond, Va. This firm is adding largely to its glass this season.

The price of glass is now so low as to be very attractive for repair purchasing.

Dingee & Conard Co., West Grove, Pa., are pushing Queen Beatrice rose, Mr. Lynch believing that this variety will make an excellent plant for the home.

Specimen plants of Pandanus Veitchii have been extremely scarce this season.

Geo. E. Campbell, Flourtown, Pa., will plant three houses of Killarney and two of Richmond, discarding Bride and Maid.

MILWAUKEE.

The Market.

Last week was a busy one. Shipping business, especially, was good and the first part of the week was satisfactory. But on Friday and Saturday, even though the demand was good, the supply was far too great and some stock was left over. Altogether everyone seems satisfied.

Some local grown peonies, which are of a good quality, came in the first part of the week.

Several large wedding decorations, including one by M. A. McKenney & Co., at Appleton, Wis., and one executed by J. M. Fox, helped to relieve the oversupply to some extent.

Club Meeting.

The club meeting, June 4, brought out a good number, especially growers. The subject of the evening was taken up by Fred Lautenschlager, of the Kroeschell Bros. Co., Chicago, who gave an interesting talk on heating by hot water.

It seems that the committee which was appointed by President Holton, of the local club, to coöperate with the State Board of Agriculture in the bedding work at the state fair park, cannot agree, as no report was forthcoming. Now, it is hoped the gentlemen will not make a fizzle of this affair, but try their best in behalf of the Florists' Club. There is plenty of space for beds, and any professional florist desiring to enter will receive a premium list and entry blank by addressing John M. True, secretary, Madison, Wis. When all beds are planted, the Florists' Club expects to select a person to look after them, whose fee will be carried by said exhibitors, unless otherwise desired.

The treasurer's report proved that the club is in a thriving condition.

All present arose from their seats to honor the memory of our late brother and friend, William Scott. He undoubtedly did more for the average florist by his writings in the REVIEW in recent years than any other person, and his work was not left unappreciated.

Various Notes.

Quite a delegation of Chicago florists came up on the special train to witness the great Ketchel-Papke fight and help swell the attendance to 4,500, which was the number reported next day. Their stay was brief, the train arriving at 8 p. m. and returning five hours later.

The Holton & Hunkel Co. is handling some fine Aristocrat and White Perfection carnations.

The C. C. Pollworth Co.'s rose houses are just coming into crop and the quality is fine.

Nic Zweifel, of North Milwaukee, and the C. C. Pollworth Co. are experimenting with growing carnations under glass instead of putting into the field, and to this end have several benches planted at this time.

Visitors: Adam Zender, Park Ridge, Ill.; Fred Lautenschlager, Chicago; M. Meidam, Appleton, Wis.; W. E. Macklin, Stevens Point, Wis.

We have been blessed with fine weather for the last week, which gave every one a chance to finish all outdoor planting, and we can now again give the indoor stock the necessary care.

State of Trade.

Naturally, the conditions of trade took a gradual drop after Decoration day, but at the same time none of the florists is making any complaint, as funeral orders were quite plentiful and large weddings numerous. The drop which is most noticeable is the drop in prices. The weather is very warm, with the mercury running as high as 98 degrees in the shade, not to say anything about the temperature in the sun and under glass. The intense heat is causing the roses, such as Brides, Bridesmaids and Richmond, to come in very small, and they seem to be growing smaller each day. Kaiserin and some of the more popular summer roses are commencing to look well.

The crops on carnations are quite plentiful, but only in the delicate shades. Large orders are being booked on red carnations for the commencement exercises of the Steele high school, red carnations being its class flower and color. Sweet peas sell fairly well, and are used most generously in wedding decorations and bouquets. Lily of the valley finds ready sale. The people of Dayton have been enjoying home-grown cherries, mulberries and strawberries in the last week or so.

Club Meeting.

The Dayton Florists' Club held its monthly business meeting at the establishment of J. F. Young, on East Fifth street, June 1. The proposition to enter the proposed federation of improvement associations and welfare leagues of the city was submitted, but no immediate action was taken on the subject. General topics were discussed for the welfare of the club, after which the meeting adjourned.

The Florists' Club has, since this meeting, decided to omit the regular monthly meetings until September, as it was thought that the members needed all the rest possible to be obtained during the hot summer months. No meetings will be held unless a special meeting be called by the president, H. H. Ritter.

Various Notes.

Mrs. Elizabeth Young left June 7 for Des Moines, Ia., where she has been sent as state representative of the Degree of Honor of A. O. W. of Ohio. Mrs. Young expects to be gone at least two weeks and expects to stop in Chicago on her return home.

John Boehner was kept busy last week with funeral orders.

H. H. Ritter has completed his decorations at the Algonquin hotel roof garden, which is said to be quite elaborate. Mr. Ritter was very busy last week with some large wedding decorations.

We note by the report of the weather conditions in Chicago that that city has had an overabundance of rain, while in Dayton it is very hot and dry. The Dayton florists therefore request that Chicago send a little of the rain this way. Everything in the fields is suffering dreadfully for the want of a shower.

The traveling salesmen, who during Decoration day rush were taking life easy, are beginning to make their reappearance on the program.

The Miami Floral Co. has plans under way for the erection of a concrete tank, and a new packing room, office, cellar and storeroom. They intend to start building in about three weeks.

HUTCHINSON, KAN.—John Stamm has planted the beds at the Santa Fe station grounds, the principal feature being the word "Hutchinson" in coleus.

ANDERSON, IND.—Stuart & Hough say that business has been good in spite of unfavorable weather, too wet and too warm. A big business was done in plants for Memorial day and the results were entirely satisfactory.

WORCESTER, MASS. — Memorial day trade was heavier here this year than ever before, according to the testimony of a majority of the florists. The strength and endurance of everyone in the business were taxed to the utmost in the effort to supply orders, and many of the forces worked two nights without sleep. It is stated that even the Easter trade was greatly exceeded by this Decoration day rush. The amount of work was increased, and the resultant profits somewhat decreased, by the excessive heat, which caused the flowers to wilt quickly in spite of every effort to keep them fresh.

MADISON, N. J.—Brant-Hentz Flower Co. has been incorporated; capital, $2,000; incorporators, Elwood Brant, Henry Hentz, Jr., and Bankson R. Morgan.

Visited Chicago: Chas. P. Guelf, with Jerome B. Rice Seed Co., Cambridge, N. Y.

The national organization of wholesale grocers has adopted resolutions opposing the parcels post.

The interest in the approaching convention of the American Seed Trade Association gives promise of the largest attendance on record.

The Iowa Seed Dealers' Association, "an organization to promote the sale of pure seeds," had a good meeting at Des Moines June 9.

Wood, Stubbs & Co., Louisville, send a photograph of their new building, erected on the site of the one burned last July. The picture and their description indicate that they are much better equipped than before.

J. Bolgiano & Son, Baltimore, have just completed the installation of the largest chick food and poultry foods manufacturing plants in Maryland. The firm started the manufacture of these foods in a small way, but from time to time has been compelled to increase its manufacturing capacity and recently has felt justified in enlarging its facilities for the making of the foods to more than ten times the original capacity. The firm is now prepared to supply 150,000 bushels of poultry foods a year, and as it has been behind in its orders continuously for the past six months, it feels confident that the supply will be entirely taken.

REAPPRAISEMENTS.

The following reappraisements of interest to the handlers of seeds and bulbs have been announced by the customs authorities:

LILY BULBS.—From exporters as below: Yokohama, exported August 23, 1907; entered at Milwaukee. File No. 47893. Entry 1027, 1028, etc. Findings of Sharretts, G. A.: Hnom, Seitaro Arai, multiflorum, 7-9; entered at 66.16 yen per 1,000. No advance. Ditto, 9-10; entered at 78.02 yen per 1,000. No advance. Giganteum, 7-9; entered at 62.82 yen per 1,000. No advance. Longiflorum, 7-9; entered at 31.74, advanced to 35 yen per 1,000. Ditto, 9-10; entered at 68.30 yen per 1,000. No advance. Discount, 5 per cent. From Rehachiro Tanoi, Jap. lily bulbs; entered at from $21 to $37.50 per 1,000. No advance. And similar goods. Charges included.

THE WEEK IN SEEDS.

With the arrival of hot weather the seed trade has not much to look forward to except the revival in the demand for insecticides, which always comes with the advent of genuine summer. The seed business has run down to a little more than the trade in turnip seeds and the one or two other seasonable items. Counter trade in seeds has practically ceased and there is little doing in plants.

In the growing department, conditions are more favorable than a week ago. The weather has been good and planting and growth generally satisfactory, although great heat has done some damage to special crops. Those seedsmen who are away on crop inspection tours are sending home favorable reports except as to sweet peas in California and some reduction of acreages which will affect the supply of other seeds even with fair yields.

IMPORTS.

The imports of seed through the port of New York for the week ending May 30 were as follows:

| Kind. | Pkgs. | Val. | Kind. | Pkgs. | Val. |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Anise | 75 | $ 973 | Cummin | 101 | $1278 |
| Caraway | 200 | 1931 | Rape | 5 | 21 |
| Cardamom | 13 | 301 | Other | .. | 1490 |
| Clover | 680 | 20580 | | | |

CANNERS' PEAS.

Advices from Baltimore indicate that there is likely to be a decided shortage in the pea pack from the estimates based on the large acreage set out this year. According to some reports Maryland canners cannot expect to make over twenty per cent of a normal pack, but other estimates run higher. In Delaware large packers believe that they will get about seventy-five per cent of last year's output. The capricious weather of the last two weeks has had a pronounced effect upon the crop. The recent hot spell caused a rapid development, which the subsequent rains and the cool weather have retarded. Receipts at Baltimore have shown a decided falling off and most of the raw stock is fit only to be made into seconds. Some reports say that the shortage will be confined mainly to the sifted and finer grades.

This is interesting to the seed trade, because a short pack will mean another year of very high prices for seed peas of the canning varieties, for every season that the market is well cleaned up the canners each put out as large an acreage as possible.

SOME NOVELTIES IN CANNAS.

One of our very best canna novelties up till now is, no doubt, the Mme. Marguerite Mühle. It was raised by Argad Mühle in Temesvar, Hungary, who named it after his wife and introduced it into the trade a year or two ago. For the massing and composing of small or large groups it is one of the best sorts we have in our lists at present. The large, lightly crested flowers show a lovely cherry pink color and stand—on long stems from three to four feet high—well above the foliage, which is quite green and only shows a narrow red margin.

Canna Mme. Marguerite Mühle flowers very profusely and brings one flower spike quickly after the other. Among the distinct points in its favor is the fact that even the hardest sunshine does not alter or bleach the color of the flowers, and another advantage is the easy way in which this variety can be propagated. It is a splendid and vigorous grower and will give great satisfaction to gardeners and owners of gardens everywhere.

A few more good varieties of cannas are: Stadtrat Heidenreich, with brownish red leaves and yellowish red flowers; Wilhelm Bofinger, with green foliage and fiery red blooms; President Meyer, leaves brown-red and flowers carmine cherry-red; Alma Saccur, with dark green leaves and yellow flowers, one of our best yellow varieties; R. Wallace, with green leaves and very effective yellow blooms; F. B. Van der Schoot, broad green leaves and large dark lemon-colored flowers; Konsul W. Vellnagel, with broad bluish green leaves and yellow flowers, which are marked with brown spots; Alfred Manthner, with brown-red foliage and scarlet flowers, marked with dark yellow spots and margin. ## BIG CROPS SEEM CERTAIN.

Enormous yields of wheat and oats are indicated by the government's report of general conditions on June 1, which was made public June 8. The prospects are for much better results than those obtained last year, the outturn of oats promising to be a record breaker. Despite reports of damage to ripening winter wheat, the condition of the plant is better than even the most sanguine had expected, and the situation in spring wheat territory borders on the ideal.

The statement indicated a condition of winter wheat of 86, a loss of 3 points from the May 1 showing, but compared to only 77.4 June 1, 1907, 82.7 June 1, 1906, 85.5 June 1, 1905, and a ten-year average of 81.1, which, using the popular basis of computation and the May 1 area of 29,744,000 acres, promises a yield of 444,000,000 bushels.

The condition of spring wheat is given as 95, with a sown area of 17,710,000 acres, or 631,000 acres greater than the sown area June 1, 1907. The crop in sight in the northwest is 290,000,000 bushels, the total for the nation being approximately 734,000,000 bushels, or about 100,000,000 bushels more than the total crop harvested last year.

Harvesting already is under way in the southwest, the reports indicating satisfactory results in Oklahoma, Tennessee and Texas.

The general average condition of oats is given as 92.9, compared to only 81.6 June 1, 1907. The condition in 1905 also was 92.9. Using the sown area—31,644,000 acres—and the popular basis of computation, a yield of approximately 1,056,000,000 bushels is indicated. This is the largest prospective yield in the history of the nation.

The June 1 condition of the rye crop was 91.3, with an indicated yield of 31,000,000 bushels, against an outturn of 31,556,000 bushels in 1907, when June 1 the condition was 88.1. The area of the barley crop is given as 6,697,000 acres, with a condition of 89.7, against 84.9 June 1, 1907, and an indicated crop of 178,000,000 bushels, against a yield of 153,597,000 bushels last year, when the area was 6,153,000 acres. The condition of hay was 96.8, much better than that of last year.

PENNY POST WITH ENGLAND.

Postmaster General Meyer announced June 4 that an agreement had been reached with the British government providing for a letter postage of 2 cents an ounce between the United States and Great Britain and Ireland, to become effective October 1, 1908.

The matter of "penny postage," as it is called in England, has been under consideration for some time, and as far back as last July President Roosevelt approved Mr. Meyer's course in urging a "restricted union with England."

October 1, 1907, the universal postal union, which governs the international postal transactions of the various civilized countries, reduced the rate of letter postage from 5 cents a half ounce to 5 cents for the first ounce and 3 cents for each additional ounce, which is the present rate between the United States and Great Britain.

Under the articles of the universal union, any two states can form a restricted union. Examples of restricted unions are those now existing which permit a 2-cents-an-ounce letter rate between the United States and Cuba, the United States and Panama and the United States and Canada.

Postmaster General Meyer believes that this reduction in the rate of postage to the United Kingdom ultimately will result in an increase of receipts, because it has always been found that a reduction of the letter rate resulted finally in increasing the revenue. He is also of the opinion that a lower postage will lead to freer commercial intercourse.

It is said that in England the announcement of a penny post arrangement with the United States gives greater gratification to the British press and people than many of the weightier political reforms, and is especially greeted as an important stage on the road to a universal penny post. It is considered certain to have considerable effect on foreign opinion in this matter, and little doubt is entertained that it will speedily be followed by the announcement that negotiations with France to the same end have been satisfactorily concluded.

BOSTON.

The Market.

Summer heat prevails and market conditions are the reverse of encouraging. Much of the stock now arriving is of such poor quality that it is worth little. Roses are, in many cases, coming badly mildewed and only a limited number of really good blooms are arriving. Kaiserin takes the lead, some remarkably fine ones being seen. Prices are low and it is hard to dispose of the cheaper grades. Carnations are also showing the effects of the warm weather and are getting small. Many also show the ravages of red spider. Sweet peas are now coming in small lots from outdoors and sell quite well. There is little sale for such lilies as are coming on, but lily of the valley is in fair demand. Gladioli are still quite plentiful, without any special call for them. Peonies are abundant, being several weeks earlier than last year. Both singles and doubles are seen, the latter predominating. There is a fair demand for these, especially pink and white varieties.

There has been an active demand for all bedding plants and some of the larger specialists in these are already almost sold out of stock.

Rhododendron Show.

There was a splendid show of rhododendrons and other seasonable flowers at Horticultural hall June 6, the large exhibition hall being entirely filled. For largest collection of rhododendrons, six trusses of each, Walter Hunnewell, T. D. Hatfield gardener, was first with a splendid collection; Mrs. J. L. Gardner, William Thatcher gardener, was second. Walter Hunnewell filled three large tables with a great variety of hardy and tender varieties. R. & J. Farquhar & Co. had forty finely flowered rhododendrons in tubs, also numerous kalmias and Canterbury bells, all beautifully flowered and well arranged, the best group the firm has ever shown, and were awarded a silver gilt medal. They also had a large and representative collection of German iris and other herbaceous plants.

Blue Hill Nurseries was first and second for thirty bottles of herbaceous plants. They received a certificate of merit for the new Lupinus polyphyllus Moerheimi. Thurlow & Co. were in the lead for thirty-six vases of German iris; F. J. Rea, second. Mrs. J. L. Gardner had the best twenty-five orchids arranged for effect, with foliage plants. J. E. Rothwell had a large collection of cut orchids. Harvard Botanic Gardens received a cultural certificate for Cereus speciosus. They also had a splendid group of finely flowered fuchsias which were quite an attraction. Mrs. Frederick Ayer, George Page gardener, also had a nice lot of fuchsias. C. W. Parker had fine Iris pallida Dalmatica, and Mrs. E. M. Gill a good general display.

E. J. Shaylor & Son had a good table of single and double peonies. Among his striking new ones were E. G. Hill, raised by Lemoine, Mme. Guyot from A. Brochet and a fine, extremely dark seedling, single, of his own raising. James McKissick had an excellent lot of peonies, and Col. F. Mason had a large vase of peonies. W. W. Rawson & Co. had a general display of hardy flowers, also several new Gladiolus nanus. S. Rand showed Magnolia Watsoni and was awarded honorable mention. George Hollis had a good collection of German iris. There was a large display of vegetables. The Spaulding estate, F. E. Cole gardener, had the best collection; E. L. Lewis, second.

Various Notes.

Extremely hot weather for early June continues, shade temperatures of 88 and 90 degrees being recorded June 7 and 8.

The great carnival at Holm Lea, Brookline, June 6, attracted an attendance of 15,000 and the affair netted $30,000 for charity. Prof. Sargent's beautiful grounds were looking at their best, the rhododendron and azalea display being superb.

Elijah A. Wood and Mrs. David Fisher's estate are among those sending in extra fine varieties of peonies to the market at present.

Henry M. Robinson & Co. report prices as low and too much material arriving, but trade better than could be expected.

A. Leuthy & Co. have had a tremendous call for bedding plants this season and never sold so many before Memorial day as this year. They refused orders for many thousands of geraniums on that day.

As usual, growers are having considerable trouble with cutworms on their carnations and other crops this season, some reporting them more numerous than ever. In addition to the gypsy and brown tail moth pests, we are also suffering from the attacks of cankerworms in unprecedented numbers, which are working much destruction to trees and shrubs.

William Sim is now marketing some of his Comet tomatoes, which he will shortly be able to pick by the ton daily.

Farquhar & Co. have had the heaviest call for bedding plants of any year since they started in business.

Welch Bros. are doing a good shipping trade to seaside and mountain resorts. They had a great business at Memorial day. W. N. Craig.

Vegetable Forcing.

No one appears to consider winter tomatoes a profitable crop at obtainable prices. Estimates of private growers and experiment station reports agree that a price of at least 35 cents the pound should be obtained to allow a fair return for the labor and expense of production. Wholesale prices range from 10 to 40 cents the pound, and seldom average more than 25 cents for the season. Large quantities of greenhouse tomatoes are grown in late fall and early spring as succession or catch crops for otherwise idle glass, and doubtless often afford fair profit, as no considerable fuel consumption can be charged against them.

GREENHOUSE VEGETABLES.

Boston, June 8.—Tomatoes, 12½c to 15c lb.; cucumbers, $2 to $4 box; mushrooms, $2.50 box.

Chicago, June 9.—Cucumbers, 25c to 65c doz.; leaf lettuce, 7½c to 10c case; mushrooms, 35c to 65c lb.

POLLINATING TOMATOES.

It is well understood among tomato growers that, other conditions being equal, a bloom with a long pistil, carrying the stigma beyond the clasping anthers, is more likely to be fertilized in the comparatively still air of a greenhouse than one with a short pistil. In practice, greenhouse tomatoes are pollinated by sharply jarring the vine supports on sunny days when the air within is comparatively dry, or even rapping, with a light stick or long-handled brush, the flower clusters themselves. This releases the mature pollen contained in the chinks of the crowded anthers so that it emerges in minute cloud-like puffs. If the stigma is beyond the tip of the anthers it is almost certain to be coated with pollen, as it is usually in receptive condition as soon as the pollen is ripe. If too short the pollen shower passes beyond, so that the sensitive portion of the stigma may be missed, or so imperfectly fertilized that malformed fruits follow. Many growers find it profitable in dull midwinter weather to collect pollen in a watch glass or other convenient receptacle and apply it daily to such blooms as may appear receptive. This work is greatly facilitated when the styles are of good length. The ideal greenhouse tomato, according to Dr. Van Fleet, should produce sufficient pollen during the gloomiest and shortest of winter days, and be so constructed that fertilization should result from a comparatively light jar. Mayflower, of all varieties, has characteristically the most projecting stigmas, and has never been considered prolific in the field, but was long a favorite inside for its reliability.

PELARGONIUMS.

During the last few weeks the ivy-leaved pelargonium, Galilee, has been one of the most prominent flowering plants in the London market, says a writer in the Horticultural Advertiser. It is used extensively for window-boxes, and when properly treated, it produces a wealth of bloom. It has also become a popular variety as a pot plant.

Since reference has been made to the value of careful selection for stock, I find that growers keep their eyes open, and my attention has been called to two selected sports. One grower has a sport with rather larger flowers, which are also of a more pleasing shade of color. There can be no doubt but that there is a decided difference, for plants of the ordinary sort growing with them proved the distinction. Another grower brought me blooms only, of a decided sport, the color being of a pretty lavender mauve shade, and I was assured that the plants propagated since the sport was first selected all kept true to color and had the same free habit as the parent. I find that another grower has a seedling variety of a similar color, which he has grown for several years, but he has grown it exclusively for cut bloom, and has not, as far as I am aware, offered plants for sale. The habit of this variety is, however, quite distinct from Galilee.

I may add that though Galilee is so extensively grown, Mme. Crousse would, probably, beat the record for quantities. It is curious that this old variety should have stood the test for so many years. I think, if comparison could be made that what most growers now have, would be found to be an improvement on the original. I find that from various growers there is a slight difference, some being of rather a better shade of color. Culture makes some difference, yet there is naturally a slight variation. This is proved from the fact that one grower secured a sport some years ago, which had almost pure white flowers.

We have had many other varieties on the market at various times, but none except those referred to above and Souvenir de Chas. Turner have yet been found profitable to grow in large quantities, and it is only a few growers who do well with the last named.

Denver, Colo.—The Washington Park Floral Co. has been incorporated, with $25,000 capital stock, by John C. Buckman, Frank A. Buckman and Newton Anderson.

La Crosse, Wis.—The La Crosse Floral Co., the new firm whose incorporation was recently reported in the Review, has purchased six acres of land and will soon erect two greenhouses.

DETROIT.

The Market.

Commencement exercises have been keeping florists working overtime lately, but during the daytime things are quiet. These exercises are taking place somewhat earlier than usual this year. The demand for peonies is good, but not enough to relieve the market.

Flowers of all kinds are plentiful. In roses the Richmond, La Detroit, Kaiserin, Killarney, Bride and Maid are the best. Beauties are quite plentiful, but the quality is nothing extra.

Some fine sweet peas in the delicate shades are arriving from Mount Clemens daily. Many thousand were disposed of for graduating exercises.

Carnations are of good quality and meeting with a steady demand, despite the street merchants' low price.

Various Notes.

What was at first intended only for a ball game between some of the boys, turned out to be a grand outing on Belle Isle on Friday, June 5. Many wives and sweethearts were in the crowd, which after the game embarked to Insel Ruhe, the home of Mrs. William Dilger, on Belle Isle. Here the merrymakers were treated to a grand feast, speeches, songs, poetry by Browne, and reciting. Of course, the ball game was the feature of the day. The Michigan Cut Flower Exchange sluggers carried off the honors with a score of 20 to 15. W. B. Brown, of the opposing team, was feeling pretty good and it is thought that the laughter he provoked got the boys excited. Captains Pierce and Rahaley are on speaking terms, but Mr. Pierce will positively not talk baseball since the game. These outings are what get the members of the club acquainted and, should there chance to be any hard feeling between any of the boys, a few of these outings will expel it.

Philip Breitmeyer and J. F. Sullivan were among the jolly crowd of Detroit business men who participated in the trip to the Soo on the new D. & C. steamer, City of Cleveland.

J. F. Sullivan is cutting hundreds of fine peonies. Many are disposed of, but some meet the usual fate.

Mrs. Hugo Schroeter is spending several months with relatives in Boston and at her old home in Newport, R. I.

Otto H. Cron, of Monroe, Mich., reports a splendid growth in business. He has placed orders with the John C. Moninger Co., of Chicago, for material for several new houses.

Peter F. Reuss, who has been with Schroeter all winter, has left for northern Michigan, where he will again engage in the fern business. H. S.

OSKALOOSA, IA.—The Kemble Floral Co. has lately had part of its force engaged in planting the beds in the city parks, and therefore has been unusually busy. The firm will plant a stock of grafted Maids, Brides and Killarney in part of its houses this season.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

Decoration day has come and gone and everything has settled down to thorough quietness, with nothing to break the monotony except an occasional funeral order or a small wedding decoration.

Speaking of Memorial day, I find that the business done in the stores was not over seventy-five per cent of that of one year ago, while the country shipping orders were not over fifty per cent of those of last year. This is a fair estimate, and only in isolated cases was there any excess over this.

The general business depression that is to be found everywhere is responsible for the falling off in trade, and the proportion lost during last week is not more than has been the lot of the florists to experience during all of this year.

Cut flowers of all kinds are cheap. Roses can be had at from $1 per hundred upward and carnations at about the same figure. Sweet peas have proven to be one of the best sellers during the entire spring and they cost the retailers about 75 cents per dozen bunches. Bride gladioli of the several kinds have been in good demand and there has been no excess of them the last week.

Other kinds of outside stock have moved well, but prices have since then gone to smash.

There has been a steady demand for all kinds of green stuff. Smilax, asparagus and maidenhair fern are proving themselves to be money-makers and it appears to make little difference how poorly other kinds of stock sell; these extras are always called for. Those growers who devote their houses almost exclusively to this class of stock seem to feel less difficulty in selling their wares than is experienced by flower growers who devote their time either to carnations or roses.

Various Notes.

Martin Reukauf, representing H. Bayersdorfer & Co., of Philadelphia, is in town.

D. Raymond, of San Jose, passed through town this week, on his way to northern California.

J. D. Hinks, of C. C. Morse & Co., reports heavy orders for forcing bulbs for the coming season.

The Hassard Nursery Co., of Fruitvale, Cal., has opened a depot at Mountain View cemetery, Oakland.

Chas. Budd, formerly with J. W. Milton, of Des Moines, Ia., is on a visit to California. G.

The Market.

Trade made a decided spurt the last week in May, and when we closed shop on Memorial day there was scarcely a flower left over. Omitting Easter, it was the busiest week of this year. All through the northwest the weather had been cold and wet for a whole month, and, as a result, outdoor flowers were few and inferior. The demand from out of town probably broke all records, and we received some good, substantial orders from as far as the interior parts of Idaho and Wyoming. There was the usual call for design work for Memorial day, which cleaned up everything with a short stem. Carnations were in pretty good supply and the retail prices advanced to $1.50 per dozen. There was also a good crop of indoor roses, the best selling for $3 per dozen.

The Japanese iris, early peonies and other garden stock were water-soaked and sold at bargain-counter prices. That fine late variety of peony, festiva maxima, which sold a year ago for $4 per dozen, will not be in bloom for two weeks yet. After summing up everything, the retailers agree that May was a pretty good month, despite some extremely dull days.

Various Notes.

The great rose fiesta is now in progress and Portland is looking her best in rose and green. Had the committee in charge acted wisely, this festive occasion, which means so much to the rose enthusiasts, would have been postponed for ten days. The unfavorable season blighted the buds and they develop imperfectly; and then there is a scarcity, hence the use of too many artificial flowers.

Our amateur rose society gave a very creditable show June 2, in one of the old fair buildings, which received a tremendous patronage. Other features of the week will be several parades of decorated vehicles, for which liberal prizes are offered. We wish there were more flowers and that the weather was ten degrees warmer. H. J. M.

HARDY STOCK IN POTS.

The handling of hardy stock that is grown in pots is one of the severest trials of the nurseryman in the dry portions of California during the summer season. I refer to both deciduous and evergreen stuff, and with many dealers these furnish by far the most of the stock handled.

Where there is such an absence of natural moisture as there is in California at this time, the question of keeping plants moist enough to insure a healthy growth is all-important. The proper amount of repotting and shifting takes up much of the time, and watching that the stock does not root through too much has to be always borne in mind. Staking and pruning will have to be done several times during the season, and with each change the grower has to be on the alert to see that his plants do not go backward and become unsalable.

TO THE TRADE

Less than four years ago I built two small greenhouses, as a venture into the florists' world. My twelve greenhouses, located at my home in New Cumberland, Pa., the two stores in Harrisburg, Pa., one at 35 North Second St., the other at 1108 Market St., and the store at 159 South St., Steelton, Pa., are proof to me that the key to success is carefully looking after the wants of one's patrons, by giving both wholesaler and retailer only the best that can be grown and never allowing anyone to be dissatisfied.

Having recently added seed departments to each of my stores, I am now in shape to take care of my trade in the most satisfactory manner and promise to give the same careful attention to all in the future as in the past.

With thanks for past patronage, I am, for pleasure and profit,

Very truly yours,

JOHN A. KEPNER,

The old way, and in many respects a good one, was to plunge the pots in the earth in rows and leave about an inch of the top of the pot exposed above the surface. While this is an easy way and is probably more natural for the stock itself, it entails a great deal of work and is hard on the pots themselves. For such kinds of deciduous or evergreen stock as are not of very fast growth and do not make an excess of roots it does very well, and the stock need not be shifted during the entire season. But where the rule is to grow strong, both above and below the soil, it is a much better idea to keep such articles on the surface of the ground, in a frame, and with a heavy mulching of manure on top. This acts both as an aid to moisture and as an enrichment to the soil, and is an ideal way to grow such stock.

If the staking, pruning and shifting are watched carefully enough, it is surprising what growths can be had in small sized pots, and these can in turn be handled at any time, with no danger of dying. Many plants will, in addition, root freely in the mulching and an extra fine lot of roots is thus assured.

The greatest saving, however, is in the watering, and where once a day is the imperative rule in the middle of summer, it becomes only twice a week with sufficient mulching. This can be appreciated doubly when the grower has to depend on a town water supply for his source.

Lath houses, provided the stock is not crowded too closely, are a splendid adjunct in the handling of hardy stock and have a natural tendency to encourage plants to climb upward. They lessen the necessity for watering considerably,

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., J. W. Hill, Des Moines, Ia.; Vice-Pres., C. M. Hobbs, Bridgeport, Ind.; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester, N. Y.; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester, N. Y. The 33d annual convention will be held at Milwaukee, June 10 to 12, 1908.

LONICERA PERICLYMENUM is a native of Europe, a particularly fine specimen of climber, having heads of fragrant red and yellow flowers in great profusion. There are several varieties, those that do not begin to flower until late in the season being recommended for the northern states.

SOME surprising figures were tabulated at the recent nut growers' meeting at Monticello, as to the acreage of commercial pecan orchards. In four Georgia and five Florida counties the area reported amounts to 6,885 acres or about 140,000 trees. In this tabulation none of the seedling orchards were counted.

A BODY of men who called themselves the Prosperity Association held a convention at St. Louis a fortnight ago, but the real prosperity body is in session at Milwaukee this week. There is hardly a nurseryman who has anything but good words to say of the spring season and there is unanimity of opinion that next year will be the best yet.

THE MILWAUKEE CONVENTION.

MILWAUKEE, June 10.—The Plankinton house began to fill up with nurserymen June 9 and the attendance at the opening hour today was fully as large as at any previous session. This is the thirty-third annual. There is a large trade exhibit, comprising the usual line of samples, although not all were in place this morning.

It was considerably past the announced hour when J. W. Hill, the president, called to order and, after the usual preliminaries in the way of welcome and response, read his annual address. In his paper he recounted the progress made in the last year and proposed a number of activities for the association in the future. He was followed by Secretary Seager and Treasurer Yates with their annual reports, which showed the society to be making progress.

The balance of the morning was given to the reports of standing committees. Possibly the most important of these was the report of the committee on legislation, read by Wm. Pitkin, and published in this issue.

There will be sessions at 9 a. m. on Thursday and Friday, June 11 and 12, the larger part of each day being left open for intercourse between the members, for not the least important feature of the convention is the large amount of business which is transacted between those in attendance.

The early arrivals were unanimous in reporting an excellent season's business. The general satisfaction so overshadows the few reasons for complaint that the trade looks forward to next season with great optimism.

NURSERY LEGISLATION.

At the Milwaukee convention, June 10, Wm. Pitkin, as chairman of the committee on legislation, reported on the work done by the committee during the year, in part as follows:

At the convention of 1907, a resolution was passed authorizing the committee to test the law which had been previously enacted by the legislature of South Dakota, attempting to regulate the shipments and distribution of nursery stock within the borders of that state.

Following the rules of the association, your chairman invited several western nurserymen who were largely interested in South Dakota business to act as members of the committee in reference particularly to the South Dakota matter, viz.: B. E. Fields, of Fremont, Neb.; E. M. Sherman, Charles City, Ia.; E. F. Edmondson, of Perry, Ia. Consultation with these gentlemen, and with the members of the executive committee, showed that it was the unanimous opinion that a test case should be pushed through.

Our attorneys, McGuire & Wood, were therefore instructed to proceed, and were able to arrange with the authorities of South Dakota for a test case, which was promptly brought before the supreme court of that state, and decided in the main in favor of the nursery interests. The decision touched only on certain sections of the act, and for that reason did not declare the entire act unconstitutional, as we hoped.

The test case came before the court in this manner: It was arranged that a salesman representing an Iowa nurseryman was to take orders for nursery stock in South Dakota, regardless of the fact that his employer had not filed the entomologist's certificate, or taken out a license, and had not observed any of the provisions of the law. The agent was arrested for violation of the law, and application was made to the supreme court for his discharge on habeas corpus.

This action simply brought into question such provisions of the law as had been violated by the agent and his principals, viz.: the requirement for the filing of the entomologist's certificate, the procuring of a permit and the requirement for payment of a license fee. Consequently these were the only provisions of the law as to which the court was called upon to render judgment, although they did go a step further in consideration of part of Section 2. Section 1 of the law provides:

That any nurseryman, resident or nonresident, who desires to sell nursery stock in South Dakota, either directly or by salesmen, shall first secure a permit from the board of agriculture to do business in the state, and as conditions precedent to the issuance of such permit the board of agriculture shall require a certificate of inspection from a competent entomologist, and such references and evidences of integrity as may seem to be necessary to establish the responsibility and good faith of the applicant. The board of agriculture shall require a continuing bond in the sum of $5,000 on which any person who sustains damage by reason of the violations of this act may recover.

Section 2: Any agent who sells nursery stock in South Dakota shall be required to carry a letter or certificate from his principal, setting forth the fact that he is duly authorized to represent such nursery, and that a guarantee is made that any written contract entered into by him as agent will be fulfilled if the same is accepted by said nursery, unless notification to the contrary be made in writing to the purchaser within thirty days after such order or contract is made. In addition to the foregoing, each agent who sells nursery stock that may have been grown in any other state or territory, shall be required to procure and carry a duplicate of the permit issued to his principal.

Section 3: It shall be unlawful to misrepresent nursery stock, to refuse to state where the same was propagated, or the manner of propagation, or to sell nursery stock which is untrue to name, or which is unsuitable for the climate, or to sell adulterated seed, etc.

Section 5 requires the collection annually of a fee of $10 for each permit, and $2.50 for each agent's duplicate.

The decision of the court in substance is: That Section 1 is valid so far as relates to the filing of certificate of inspection, and the requirement of a permit to do business, but that the requirements of a bond and references as to responsibility and integrity are invalid; and as to Section 2, that the last paragraph which provides that every agent representing a nursery located in another state shall be required to carry a duplicate of the permit issued to his principal, is invalid, because a discrimination is made against the citizens of other states and in favor of the citizens of South Dakota, but the first paragraph of Section 2 is not covered by the decision.

Section 3 is not covered by the decision. Section 5 is declared valid so far as it relates to the license fee of $10 for the principal, but under the decision as relating to Section 2, the requirement of a fee for the agent's duplicate permit is invalid.

The decision, in the main, is in favor of the nurserymen, and it is the judgment of our counsel that we should not appeal the case. The main point not covered by the decision is the requirement of Section 2, that each agent shall carry a certificate from the principal, to which alone probably no one would object, and that the principal shall be bound by the acts of the agent unless he notifies the customer within thirty days from the making of the contract. The latter is a bad provision, but could not be reached on an appeal in the present case, and could only be taken up through a new case, after some agent or principal had violated that section of the law.

Our counsel, however, feels that this section is so plainly unconstitutional, as interfering with the right of contract, that no attempt is likely to be made toward its enforcement, and advises that we file entomologist's certificates, tender the license fee of $10 and demand a permit, and do our business as we do it elsewhere, paying no attention to the other sections of the law except to give our agents such certificate of appointment, as many of us do in the ordinary course of business.

During the year the attention of your chairman was also called to the laws of the states of Wyoming, Oklahoma and Wisconsin, and McGuire & Wood prepared an opinion as to the constitutionality and validity of those laws. It is our opinion that we have good grounds for contests in each of the three states, and would therefore recommend that test cases be brought without delay. It is believed that the funds of the association cannot be expended in any better way than in defending the rights of our members against foolish, unreasonable, arbitrary and unconstitutional legislation. If we meekly submit to such legislation, other states will follow in similar paths, until gradually but surely our business will be hampered and interfered with all over the United States.

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

We did not manage to realize much on our expectations for the last week. Some good business was looked for, but failed to materialize. Several large weddings, with the commencements, ought to have made business move much better. It was the same old cry—too heavy a supply. The market was heavily stocked with flowers, and as a consequence the price was held so low that there was nothing in it. Great quantities of flowers were sold, it is true, but the average price was so low that flowers had to be handled by the wagon load to make the books show much business in dollars and cents.

How much longer the heavy supply will continue, no one can tell, but the end is surely in sight. Carnations are hardly fit to sell. Some growers continue to hold their stock up to fair quality, but they are hardly paid for their trouble. Many have already thrown out their plants and more are doing so daily. When a few more have done this, perhaps the receipts will be reduced to a point where they can be handled at a profit to the grower.

Many growers have also thrown out their roses and it will not be many more days till the rest will have to do the same, so as to be ready for planting. This will reduce the supply of roses, which also are coming in too strong for the demand. The business has about settled itself to the usual summer basis, and as soon as the supply of flowers does likewise we can begin to think of summer vacations, fishing trips and the like.

Peonies and sweet peas were about the only flowers that were in good demand. They sold out well and at good prices. Outdoor flowers in season are in plentiful supply and sell about as usual.

Smilax is scarce and leucothoe is about out of the market for the time being. The new ferns are coming heavily. There is a good supply of other green goods and also a good demand.

Various Notes.

Miss Alice Kyrk, sister of Edith and L. H. Kyrk, was married on the evening of June 3 to John Reid, of Detroit, Mich., who was formerly of this city. The young couple left immediately for Detroit, from whence they will take an extended wedding trip through Canada. The best wishes of their many friends in the trade go with them.

G. Brunner's Sons have planted about their place a hedge of Crimson Rambler. It is now in full bloom and is a sight worth going a long way to see.

J. T. Conger has just completed painting his greenhouses and outbuildings.

C. J. Ohmer.

---

Lexington, Ky.—Honaker The Florist has let the contracts for the erection of another greenhouse, 30x150, to be devoted to roses. Mr. Honaker is giving special attention to the culture of new varieties of the rose.

Danvers, Mass.—At E. & C. Woodman's the week preceding Memorial day was one of the busiest in all their experience. In order to provide space for the proper handling of their orders, they were obliged to erect a temporary structure in the form of a large tent. Shipping orders were so numerous as to make it difficult to attend to local trade.

No less than 100 at $5.00.

Begonia Vernon or Erfordii, $5.00 per 100.

WASHINGTON.

State of Business.

Commencements, wedding decorations, and the Confederate memorial day made up the week's business. Stock is not so good. The carnations and roses look like the "good old summer time."

Club Meeting.

The club meeting June 2 was not so well attended as the last meeting. The hall is not suitable, as no shows could be had in the rooms secured. The committee was instructed to try to secure a regular meeting place that will be suitable for exhibits and social sessions.

Mr. Gude, as chairman of the Sunday closing committee, made a report as to the bill not coming up before the house last session and recommended that before the next session, the club have a special meeting and every member of the club have a chance to express himself, as he did not think that two or three should act for the club until it was thoroughly discussed. The report was accepted by the club. The fall chrysanthemum show was talked of as a reminder to the growers.

Various Notes.

The worm that caused havoc at the Gude and Kramer houses last fall has again made its appearance, but is being held in check.

The Gude Bros. Co. has its new houses under way. The first two are being glazed. The company is putting up five rose houses, 40x200, and a palm house 60x160 and twenty-five feet high. Two boilers of 125 horse-power each are being installed. Three of these houses will be planted with Beauties, one with the new rose, My Maryland, and one with Enchanter, the shell pink rose that has been grown for the last five years. A sight to see at this place is a huge stephanotis vine grown between two rose houses. The cut averages about 300 sprays of blossoms daily, which are used to advantage. A great deal is shipped out of town for wedding work.

Everything looks rosy for a large turnout at the bowling team's excursion June 18.

Wm. F. Gude and family are sojourning at Philadelphia at present and will probably take a run over to Atlantic City. O. O.

PIPING IN MICHIGAN.

I want to go into the violet business and would like some information on the subject. I have a house 20x55, with side walls three and one-half feet high and the peak six and one-half feet above the side walls. The house runs north and south, with a glass front on the south end. How many runs of pipe and of what size will be required to heat this house, and how should I arrange them? I am figuring on hot water heating. Could I use a steam boiler and what size will I need? Also what size regular water heater? A. F. F.

Your violet house can be piped in the following way with satisfaction, I believe: Use a 2-inch flow under the ridge, carry hot water to the far end and return by ten 1½-inch returns, arranged on side walls one above tne other and given a good slope from one end of the house to the other. The elevated expansion tank, connected with main returns to the boiler, should not be omitted. A good hot water boiler will, I believe, give you less trouble than to attempt to convert a steam boiler. L. C. C.

HEAT FOR A VIOLET HOUSE.

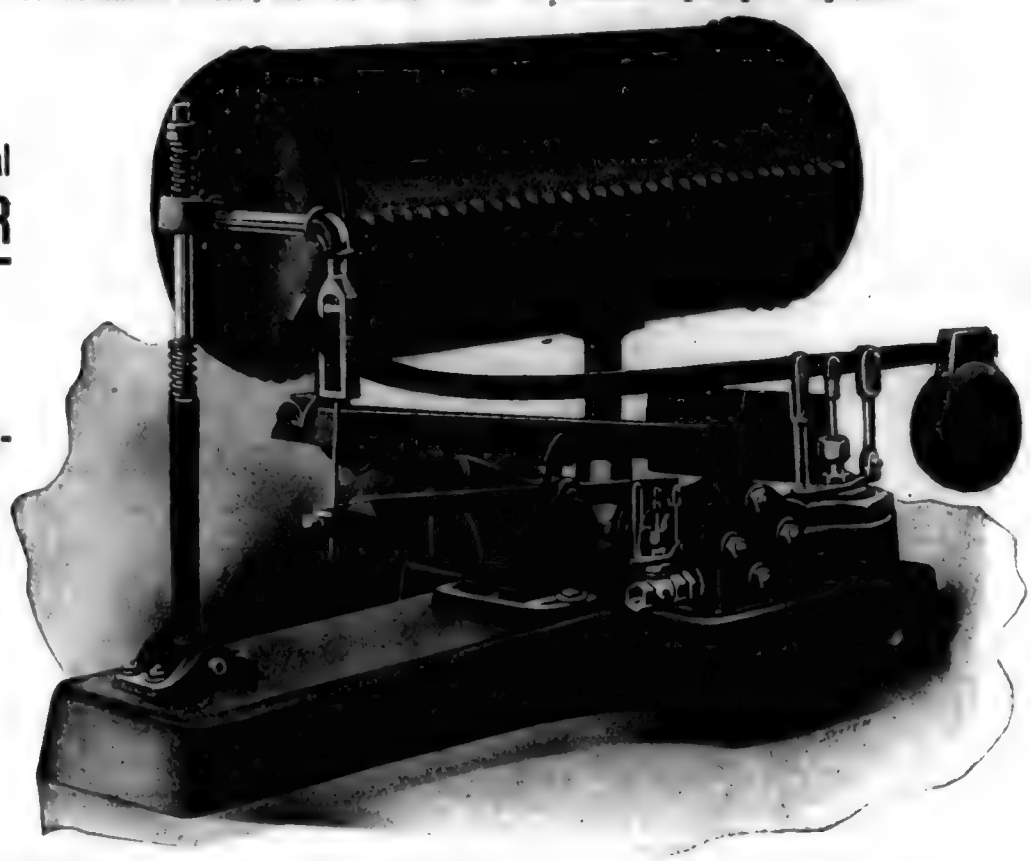
I have a greenhouse to be used for violets. It is 17x41 and runs east and west. It measures three feet to the eaves and eight feet to the ridge. It has alternate ventilators in the ridge. The west gable is glass, with a glass door, and there are two feet of glass in the south side, but none in the north side. The east end is attached to a boiler room, having a cellar 12x20 and six feet deep, in which the boiler will be placed for hot water heating. Will a Hitchings boiler, No. 22, be large enough to heat the house in the climate of western New York? How many feet of 1½-inch pipe will be needed, or would you recommend some other size? Any help you can give me about installing the heating plant will be most gratefully received. E. H.



A boiler rated to carry 250 feet of radiation should have ample capacity for the house in question. If piped with 1½-inch pipe, which is a good size for short runs of hot water, the house will require a 2-inch flow under the ridge and nine returns of 1½-inch pipe, five on the most exposed side and four on the other, all arranged in manifolds and placed well up on the side walls of the house. L. C. C.

TWO SMALL HOUSES.

As you offer your army of readers of the REVIEW information for the asking regarding their heating apparatus, I venture to ask for help from you. I have a greenhouse 13x30, with 576 feet of glass exposed, and at right angles to this house I have a shop 12x40, with an office 12x14 attached. I am heating these with a hot water boiler, which is rated at 500 feet of radiation, with a fire pot eighteen inches in diameter, a 3-inch outlet at the top and a 7-inch smoke flue, with two 2½-inch returns.

Now, what I want to know is, if I make over the shop into a greenhouse 18x40 feet, with 700 feet of glass exposed, would my boiler be large enough to heat both houses for carnations in this part of New York state, where the thermometer sometimes goes down to 30 degrees below zero? The total glass exposure in the two houses would be about 1,300 square feet. The present greenhouse, 13x30, is even-span, nine feet to the ridge and five feet to the eaves, with eighteen inches of glass on the east side. The house 18x40 will be three-quarter span, nine feet high to the ridge, five feet high on one side and six feet high on the other.

I have now ten returns of 1½-inch pipe, with one overhead flow of 2½-inch pipe, in the greenhouse, and seven returns with a 1½-inch flow in the shop and office. Do you think ten runs would be enough of 1½-inch pipe in the 18x40 house, if you consider the boiler large enough? G. E. M.

Every dollar saved in coal is a dollar added to your earnings—to your profit. It will be difficult to get cleaner-cut evidence of the money-saving side of Capitol Boilers than that given by the Ellsworth Greenhouses, Grand Island, Neb., who write:

"We have one of your Capitol Boilers in our greenhouses, and it is the finest steam boiler we ever saw. Glass surface is hard to heat, but we have no trouble whatever. It is saving us coal, and we can keep a better temperature than we ever had before. No work to take care of it."

Here is testimony from practical florists who have the same conditions to meet, the same troubles to overcome, the same expenses to watch as you have, and if the Capitol Boiler is a money-saver for them it will certainly be for you.

your proposed change. But I gather that the problem is to heat a house 13x30, together with a greenhouse 18x40 and office room, with a boiler rated to carry 500 feet. If the office room can be cut out in severe weather it may be possible to do this, but you will be working on mighty close margins. The house 13x30 ought to be handled with ten 1½-inch returns, but the house 18x40 should have at least thirteen pipes of that size. I believe the boiler is capable of doing the work, however, and would be willing to take the chance if I could get the expansion tank eighteen to twenty feet above the highest point in the heating system and connected directly with the main return close to the boiler.

PIPING IN PENNSYLVANIA.

We have a greenhouse 20x48 feet, heated by a sectional hot water boiler with a grate surface of three square feet. One 2-inch flow pipe runs out at the west side and feeds seven 1½-inch returns under the middle bench. Another 2-inch flow runs out at the east side and feeds three 1½-inch returns on the same side.

We can keep this house at 50 degrees in zero weather, with very hard firing. The west side of the house gets too cold with just the one pipe there. How many more runs of pipe will it require to give us 56 degrees in zero weather, without hard firing? The bed

I would suggest that you modify the piping of your house as follows: That you use a single 2½-inch flow under the ridge of the house. Connect both of your present 2-inch flows into this single one, carry it to the far end of the house and return by the use of fourteen 1½-inch return pipes. The present returns can be allowed to remain as they are and the four additional ones used as a manifold on the wall of the west side.

State of Trade.

May broke all records for being a hot, wet month. For fourteen days, of twenty-four hours each, there was steady rain; nine days more were cloudy, hot and sultry, while the few remaining bright, sunshiny days were red-hots. Flowers were plentiful. Carnations bloomed themselves almost to death, so to speak, but would not keep, and the glut was the worst ever experienced. Large quantities were shipped to the already overloaded commission man and brought barely enough to cover commission and express charges, while whole wagon loads were consigned to the dump. Such is the record of May.

Decoration day week opened with rain, with the temperature 90 to 100 degrees, the atmosphere loaded with moisture, and flowers keeping in good, salable condition for one day only. These conditions continued through the entire week.

Peddler wagons were in evidence all the week, but on Memorial day, especially, the florists near cemeteries had their troubles. At Valley City cemetery seven peddler wagons lined up opposite Mrs. Goebel's greenhouses, selling cheap. The Goebels hurried a lot of large boxes out in front of the greenhouses, covered them with geraniums, with a large sign, "Geraniums, 5 cents apiece." Customers swarmed around the 5-cent geraniums and the peddlers stood and looked on until, tired of standing with their wares unsold, they drove away one by one and left Mrs. Goebel victor. James Schols, out at Greenwood, struggled with five peddler wagons. At St. Andrew's cemetery one lone wagon took its stand, but did not stay long. G. F. C.

State of Trade.

Trade for Decoration day fell a little below expectations, as there was an abundance of outdoor stock in prime just at that time, which cut down the call for better stock. The weather was extremely hot a few days before Decoration, and roses and carnations felt the effect of it, as they came in very soft and with the color taken right out of them. There was a big lot of peonies on the market, but some would stand selling several days before, as they shattered badly. Outdoor roses, etc., were seen everywhere, and people having them used them instead of buying other stock.

Plant trade was heavy during the week and geraniums took the lead. Everything cleaned up nicely that was showing color.

The Confederate decoration was held Saturday, June 6, at Camp Chase, and used up a good bunch of stock.

Trade since Decoration day has been fairly good in the cut flower line, while the planting is about completed.

There are a good lot of weddings booked for this month, and this, with the commencements, will help to hold the month of June up to a good, solid month of business, after which we can all take a vacation.

We had a few cool days last week, which helped roses and carnations a great deal and they are coming in fine shape now. If the weather is not too hot from now on, we can expect some good roses all through the month of June.

Various Notes.

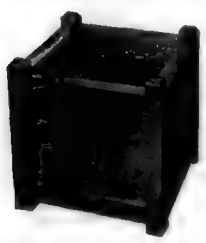
The Florists' Club held its regular meeting Tuesday night, to decide on the date for the annual picnic.



The Munk Floral Co. reports carnations holding up fairly well, and they expect to cut from about half of their old stock up to planting time. They are replanting at present, using stock out of pots.

The Fifth Avenue Floral Co. is getting ready to plant its mums. The new carnations planted in the houses out of pots are in fine shape. They are making elegant growth and ought to furnish some fine early blooms.

George D. Stewart, formerly with the Livingston Seed Co., is now representing S. M. Isbell & Co., the seedsmen of Jackson, Mich.

The greenhouses of E. L. Charles are being rapidly torn down to make room for new dwellings. Most of his stock has been sold at private sales and it is fairly well cleaned up. J. M.

The Market.

Trade for Decoration day was good and everyone seems to be satisfied. Peonies took the lead, retailing from $1 to $1.50 per dozen. Carnations were scarce, seeming to be off crop; prices ranged from 50 cents to $1 per dozen. Roses were not plentiful and were of poor quality. There were no jasmine to be had this year, as they were in too early and were all brown by Decoration day. In former years they were plentiful and went a long way in helping out. Sweet-williams were plentiful and sold readily at 75 cents per dozen. Not so much was done in plants on that day, as they were bought three or four days previous and all graves planted.

Various Notes.

Geo. M. Kellogg's store reports a fine trade, having sold everything to be had. Large quantities of peonies of their own growing, mostly white, were placed in cold storage and were all disposed of at a fair price.

R. S. Brown has improved much in health and has been in the spring rush of business, which has been one of the best for many years.

Nelson Jarrett is doing a rushing business this spring in bedding plants. He now runs two covered wagons to the market, where he disposes of most of his stock.

W. H. Humfeld reports that he is just finishing one of the most successful bedding seasons since he has been in business, which is sixteen years. The Decoration day trade was especially good.

The heavy rains in the west are causing the two rivers to overflow, and it looks as if all railroads would have to stop. H. E. Rathjen, head grower at W. H. Humfeld's, fearing a delay of railroad, left early Monday evening for Trenton, Mo., where he met his bride, Miss Marie Witten. The ceremony took place Wednesday noon. Mr. and Mrs. Rathjen will make their wedding tour to points in Illinois. The craft congratulate them.

Outdoor roses are almost a failure this season, partly due to the late frosts and partly to insects, which are destroying the foliage on some lawns where they were not sprayed. The bushes look as though a fire had been near them. We noticed one of our nurserymen having two barrels in his wagon, peddling some kind of red liquid bug destroyer. Peach trees are loaded with green aphis and the leaves curl up. In fact, this insect seems to be on nearly everything.

OUR FERTILIZERS ARE PREPARED ESPECIALLY FOR FLORISTS' USE and are analyzed by an expert chemist to see that they are free from all acids. You can depend upon their being just what you want, AND SAFE. You ought to have these on hand at all times, ready for use.

PURE BONE MEAL

The brand we are selling has no superior. It is an absolutely uniform grade of pure bone, guaranteed free from acids, and is sold at as low rates as many inferior brands, which cannot be used with safety in greenhouse work.

BLOOD AND BONE

Preferred by many of our best and largest growers owing to its great percentage of ammonia and available phosphate, which makes it quick acting. It is a mixture of pure tankage or blood and the best grade of Bone Meal in proportions to stimulate root action and bring out the best color in the blooms.

PULVERIZED SHEEP MANURE

One of the most effective of fertilizers and largely used by the best growers, both as a top dressing and in the manure tanks. The raw material for Hunt's Sheep Manure is the droppings taken from solid floor sheep corrals. Ordinary manures are largely shoveled up from the ground and contain a large proportion of soil for which you pay, but from which you get nothing except possibly weed seed. A trial order will convince the most skeptical of the superiority of our brand.

HUNT'S GUARANTEED FERTILIZERS

OUR FERTILIZERS ARE PREPARED ESPECIALLY FOR FLORISTS' USE and are analyzed by an expert chemist to see that they are free from all acids. You can depend upon their being just what you want, AND SAFE. You ought to have these on hand at all times, ready for use.

PURE BONE MEAL

The brand we are selling has no superior. It is an absolutely uniform grade of pure bone, guaranteed free from acids, and is sold at as low rates as many inferior brands, which cannot be used with safety in greenhouse work.

|---|---|
| Ammonia | 4 to 5 |
| Phosphoric acid | 23 to 26 |
| Equal to bone phosphate | 50 to 60 |

12 per cent immediately available and soluble in water.

Price

| 100 lb. bag | 2.00 |
| 200 lb. bag | 3.50 |
| 1000 lbs., ½ ton | 15.00 |

HUNT'S PURE BONE FLOUR

This is identical with our Pure Bone Meal, except it is ground to a very fine dust or flour, making it especially valuable for use in liquid form or for mixing with other fertilizers when quick action is required.

17 per cent immediately available and soluble in water.

|---|---|---|---|
| 50 lb. bag | $1.35 | 500 lb. bag | $ 9.00 |
| 100 lb. bag | 2.50 | 1000 lbs., ½ ton | 16.00 |
| 200 lb. bag | 4.00 | 2000 lbs., 1 ton | 30.00 |

BLOOD AND BONE

Preferred by many of our best and largest growers owing to its great percentage of ammonia and available phosphate, which makes it quick acting. It is a mixture of pure tankage or blood and the best grade of Bone Meal in proportions to stimulate root action and bring out the best color in the blooms.

Guaranteed Analysis Per cent

|---|---|
| Ammonia | 6½ to 7½ |
| Bone phosphate | 25 to 35 |

|---|---|---|---|
| 50 lb. bag | $1.35 | 500 lb. bag | $ 9.00 |
| 100 lb. bag | 2.50 | 1000 lb. bag, ½ ton | 16.00 |
| 200 lb. bag | 4.00 | 2000 lb. bag, 1 ton | 30.00 |

PULVERIZED SHEEP MANURE

One of the most effective of fertilizers and largely used by the best growers, both as a top dressing and in the manure tanks. The raw material for Hunt's Sheep Manure is the droppings taken from solid floor sheep corrals. Ordinary manures are largely shoveled up from the ground and contain a large proportion of soil for which you pay, but from which you get nothing except possibly weed seed. A trial order will convince the most skeptical of the superiority of our brand.

MEMPHIS, TENN.

The Idlewild Greenhouses of Otto Schwill & Co. have acquired the entire plant and business of the East End Greenhouses and conditions as to competition now are much as they were before this concern was started.

Business is good here, and has been so all winter. There has been no time when the local supply of stock was equal to the demand.

PITTSBURG.

The story of the flower business would be a sad story if one should tell it as he hears it. There is much complaint all around. Even the plantsmen, who have cleaned up pretty well, report receipts away short of last year.

As for cut flowers, there are quantities of them of all kinds, good, bad and indifferent—principally bad and indifferent—and these are going to the dump. The very best are not any too good and are enough to supply the demand. Hoo-Hoo.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.

There is not much doing in the cut flower trade here. Funeral work is fairly good, using up lots of white stock. All report a good demand for flowers Memorial day, with a tremendous call for plants. Geraniums, pansies and daisies sold well. Saturday, June 6, was carnation bargain day. Each and every one seemed to be trying to outdo his neighbor in prices. Roses also were selling cheap. The weather is getting too warm for sweet peas indoors. A few weeks more and the outdoor crop will be in. There is still a good call for bedding plants. Pansies are beginning to grow long-legged and already show the warm weather effects.

Napoleon Lemay was fined $5 in the third district court for assault on one Thomas Wilder, who, Lemay claims, annoyed him. He appealed and furnished sureties in the sum of $100. W. L.

PLATTEVILLE, WIS.—A hail storm May 29 broke practically all the glass in the greenhouse of W. A. Schaefer and destroyed a large part of his stock. He was reglazed and doing business again within a week, but with somewhat empty houses.

NEW ORLEANS.

Business at the different markets has been reduced to little and for the next three or four months not much improvement can be expected in the sale of plants. Wedding decorations and funeral work are keeping some florists, at least, quite busy.

Charles Ebele is propagating as fast as possible his new nephrolepis fern. He calls it Ebeleana gracillimum, or the New Orleans lace fern. It is a valuable novelty, the pinnæ being more divided than any other of its kind. He has also a large quantity of Phœnix Roebelenii, of which he expects a good sale when a little larger. He is satisfied with his new direct importation of palms. He uses a large quantity for decoration.

J. H. Menard has been quite ill for some time, but is recovering. M. M. L.

DALTON, MASS. — John Shields, gardener for Fred G. Crane, will sail from New York July 1, for a trip abroad. He will be absent two months.

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.—J. G. Angel says trade was three times as good at Decoration day as it was last year. He has planted his lettuce house to asters and mums.

WILMINGTON, N. C.—Carl B. Rehder and C. F. W. Rehder had charge of the decorations for the university commencement at Chapel Hill. Heretofore this work has been done by Richmond florists.

FORT DODGE, IA.—Rawlins P. Atwell will take possession July 1 of the greenhouses of P. L. Larson. Mr. Larson has conducted these greenhouses for eight or ten years and has built up a good trade.

CROMWELL, CONN.—The A. N. Pierson Co. has filed a certificate of incorporation. It is capitalized at $200,000, and will take over the business now conducted by A. N. Pierson. The incorporators are Andrew N. Pierson, Margaret G. Pierson and Wallace R. Pierson.

DIXON, ILL.—O. L. Baird's business during the week preceding Decoration day was the best in fifteen years. The growth in his business will soon compel him to enlarge his houses and make other improvements. He is at present engaged in erecting a barn and other outbuildings.

F. H. Holton, Milwaukee.

Regarding the able paper by Arthur A. Niessen, in the REVIEW of June 4, I would say that Mr. Niessen certainly strikes the right chord. The trouble seems to be that almost every retailer feels that the commission man is a necessary evil, one who should be opposed whenever and wherever possible. This is certainly an incorrect idea, for it is surely more of a convenience to the retailer than to the grower to have a commission house, as it enables the retailer to supply his wants from one central point instead of being obliged to go to half a dozen different greenhouses.

I agree with Mr. Niessen in reference to the "margin between prices," for I am sure that the profits which the retailer derives from his sales are out of all proportion and are not possible in any other line of trade. There was a time when a retailer was entitled to a larger profit, owing to the fact that he carried a stock of flowers on hand, but at the present time hardly any large retailer carries more than samples, since he depends on the commission man for the regular supply of his needs. In this way the retailer takes but small chances and his loss is small. I have seen many instances when carnations were sold at retail at $1 per dozen, while the retailer paid but $2 per hundred. Surely such a profit is unreasonable. Were the same retailer to sell his carnations at 50 cents per dozen, he would create a demand and in this way be able to dispose of more stock, helping to clean out the market and keep the stock from the street men.

Flowers should be sold on a closer margin of profit and at prices that are reasonable as compared with the wholesale quotations. I think that the public will soon realize that, owing to weather conditions, the supply of flowers and also the prices will vary, and will be willing to pay a reasonable profit to the retailer, but the retailer's prices ought to fluctuate in the same manner that the wholesale prices do. Vegetables and fruits are sold that way; why not flowers?

Why not publish the wholesale prices on flowers in the daily papers, just as the prices on wheat, corn, fruits, etc., are published, thus giving the public a chance to see at what price flowers are sold at wholesale? This, I think, would soon lead to a reduction in the retail price of flowers. This reduction would cause no loss to the retailers, as with reasonable prices the demand would become much larger.

Many retailers complain that the cost of handling flowers is larger because boxes cost so much. I would suggest that flowers be sold at the lowest possible price and then, if the customer wants them delivered or put in a box, that this be charged to additional cost, as is done in many other lines of trade.

S. A. Anderson, Buffalo.

I believe that the retailer is not prone to find fault with the manner in which the commission merchant disposes of his surplus stock. The whole argument is based on a misunderstanding between the retailer on the one hand and the commission man and the grower on the other.

Mr. Niessen asks the question, "Are you doing anything to relieve the market of the overproduction?" I believe each retailer is doing his utmost to stimulate trade. This he is bound to do, for his self-preservation. I disagree with Mr. Niessen when he says, "The thought how they could handle this stock, and in some way increase sales, never enters the minds of the majority of them." The retailer has to be alive and thoughtful and he devises many ways in which to keep his stock moving. One of the causes of the glut is the unwillingness of the public to purchase, and it is up to the retailer to devise ways and means of making his stock and prices attractive to the trade.

Mr. Niessen also says that the feeling between the commission man and the retailer is often antagonistic. I agree with him, but this is not any more so than in any other business. On one side we have the buyer, who endeavors to buy his goods as cheaply as he can, and on the other we have the seller, who gets as much as he can for his stock. Both are right and it is the one point wherein brains and courage will prove to be the winner. The point Mr. Niessen makes in regard to the commission men being called pirates, or something worse, by some retailers, is exceptional and probably is a deserved compliment.

Another point made by Mr. Niessen, in regard to mignonette, is of a retailer getting $3 per dozen for it and the grower only receiving $6 per hundred, and he wonders why. I will tell him. The retailer most likely bought 100 sprays of mignonette and by his utmost endeavors only sold two dozen of it, and the rest of it went out in the retailer's profit barrel. It is for the retailer to use his brains as to whether it is better to buy twenty-five sprays of mignonette at 6 cents, selling all at $1.50 per dozen, or to buy fifty or 100 sprays, knowing his trade will use but twenty-five, and selling it at $3 per dozen.

The commission men are complaining of not getting rid of surplus stock. They are only doing now what most retailers are doing all the time.

It is only a very small number of stores that do not give as much attention to the so-called "25-cent customer" as to those who purchase in larger amounts.

It is impossible to have a continuous bargain sale, even if you do vary the inducements. I have found that if one week you sell carnations at 25 cents, advertising them as a special bargain, the following week the same prices, the same advertising and the same energy displayed will not move one-half as much stock as at the previous sale. However, I am a firm believer in bargains, and have always endeavored to give the public anything that would benefit the grower and commission man, and at the same time further my own interests.

Philip Breitmeyer, Detroit.

In reference to Mr. Niessen's statement in regard to the margin of profit for the retailer, I want to reply. I have figured all kinds of ways and have come to the conclusion that the margin for the retailer must be twice that of the grower, if he is to succeed; conditions should govern, of course.

Being a retailer and grower, keeping a detailed account of goods that change hands, I know the average florist who keeps up an attractive display has many losses which must necessarily be charged to the selling price. On the other hand, every flower the grower furnishes to the retailer direct is charged for, whether sold by the retailer or not. In order that the retailer may come out with a profit he must be on the lookout all the time: if business is brisk he is making money, and as soon as it slacks up, invariably he goes behind. It is an easy matter to prove who is on top. Name the successful retailers and growers and tell me which is in the lead. In my twenty-five or more years of experience directly in the store end of the business I am satisfied that the grower, if a successful grower, as he should be, has the best end of the business. He has no charges to carry from one year to the other, he has no advertising, expensive delivery, fancy boxes and the many items of expense that show not on the surface but are bound to creep in and must come from the profits.

I do not believe the first-class stores can profit by making weekly bargain sales in times of glut. This has often been tried and I am of the opinion that the people get accustomed to the cheap sales and are rather disappointed if they are not continued; this from personal experience. I am rather inclined to believe in the department store or faker doing a part of this business, as also the smaller stores that are in localities where the people look for bargains. It is certain that the surplus should be disposed of. In our own business we contribute all our surplus to hospitals and this method brings returns equal to the prices that are obtained on the special bargain plan.

E. G. Gillett, Cincinnati.

I have read carefully, word for word, Mr. Niessen's paper, as published in the Review, and I find that from beginning to end he has mapped out the situation correctly and has given the real facts of the case. But, so far as cooperation is concerned, Mr. Niessen or anyone else might stand up and talk until black in the face and it would produce no effect.

When stock is scarce the retailer is all smiles as he steps into a commission house. No trouble to sell him goods then. But let the glut appear and he steps into a commission house with a sour face and nothing is good enough for him. He grumbles, pulls and hauls, picks out a few choice morsels, jews you down on the price and walks out.

Does he reduce his price to his customers? No. Why? "Because," he says, "if I do it once they will expect it next time. Then, I must use a box, pay car fare and deliver the goods." He will not consider the bargain specials for a moment, and he will not help unload the market unless he has a place to use the stock.

The retailer in the large cities will take no chances. He buys from the commission houses to fill his orders and then stops. My experience has been the same as Mr. Niessen's in this respect.

The large grower, who sells his own stock, is to blame to a great extent for gluts and low prices. He is not a commission broker, and he will sell his product for any price he chooses, while the commission broker is trying to get all he can out of the stock for his consignors, but is forced to meet competition or do no business.

I am heartily in favor of coöperation, but it is impossible.

Hugo Schroeter, Detroit.

I have read and re-read the paper in the Review of June 4 on "Coöperation of Retailer and Wholesaler," by Arthur A. Niessen, and from every point of view it appeals to me as being good. The writer has shown no partiality and his paper contains much food for thought.

When we have a glut of flowers in our city, of course, the amount of stock on hand does not compare with that of a city like Philadelphia, Chicago, New York or Boston; still, it is a glut, and the question of relieving it is becoming a serious one. No doubt, a store located on the main street in a large city can dispose of much stock in one day by selling at a greatly reduced price. One of our largest stores, located in the best section of the city, has been carrying on such sales for some time, one every Saturday. Much stock has been disposed of, but I doubt whether the financial remuneration paid for the time, labor and risk taken. If a florist has glass of his own, and his stock commences to pile up, it is a different proposition.

After all, the street merchant seems to me to be the best solution of the problem so far. We call him a faker and often talk of him as a detriment to our business. He surely deserves some credit. He takes many long chances, for when he buys stock away below the regular market price, he is compelled to buy in thousand lots; yes, ten-thousand lots, in order to get his price. When stock is scarce the fakers are usually scarce, and when it becomes plentiful they may be seen on all corners. When you look at it in this light, is not the faker a sort of a godsend? Of course, as Mr. Niessen says, "with few exceptions, they are not a desirable lot," and it is to be hoped that some day a better, more legitimate way will be found for relieving a glut. I think if the growers were to make more of a study of it, much of the glut could be prevented.

That there is room for more coöperation between the wholesaler and retailer is true. Both sides should come halfway. What we need in this city, and I believe in most cities, is an organization composed mainly of employers or their managers or foremen; this to meet at certain times on independent ground and discuss better business methods in a frank way. The object of this organization should not be to see how many members can be enrolled, but quality should be given the first consideration.

There can be no set rule for a margin between prices. A house that caters to an exclusive trade, has bells on the horses, uniformed messengers, etc., must add more to the cost price than one that caters to the middle classes. In my estimation, the average price received at retail should be about double that of the cost price for a firm doing a general business.

I would like to hear more on this subject from some of our large retail men in this and other cities. My experience in this business has been limited to a period of only a few years when compared with some of the older heads. The conditions in this city, also, are different from those in some cities.

Frank Huntsman, Cincinnati.

With reference to Mr. Niessen's paper, as printed in the Review of June 4, I think his use of the term coöperation somewhat vague. Coöperation, as he himself states, "is practical only when all parties concerned derive a benefit from their combined efforts."

Now, in time of a glut, it would be a benefit, no doubt, to the grower and the commission man to have the retail store man find an outlet for the surplus—a benefit to the grower in keeping down his losses, if not in adding to his profits, and a benefit to the commission man to the extent of the commission involved. But if the store man cannot make a profit on the transaction, it would be cooperation for him in about the same way as if he should buy a wagon of a certain wagon dealer in our town, who heads his price list in flaming characters: "Come, buy my wagons and help me to get rich."

In regard to Mr. Niessen's question, "What are the retailers doing to relieve the market of its overproduction?" I would say that the average store man is just as eager to relieve the congestion as is the faker, and for the same reason, a desire for profit. But if the store man were to follow Mr. Niessen's advice to buy in large quantities, and to make large sales and small profits, would there not be danger of his getting into the faker class, who, Mr. Niessen says, are not a desirable lot?

Mr. Niessen's remarks in regard to unselfishness and faith have the right ring and are a credit to him, but, no matter how altruistic the individual may be, the average business man is too tightly bound by the tether of profit to stray very far from the beaten track.

Mr. Niessen says there is a vast difference in the price of flowers from the grower to the public, and this is true. The public does pay a high price for the flowers, as compared with the actual cost of production. It is also true that coöperation, to be ideal, should include the consumer as well as the producer. But to carry to a conclusion this thought, and to put into practical operation some of the plans for reducing the cost to the consumer, might do away with the commission men entirely and most of us store men as well.

Frank H. Traendly, New York.

The ideas expressed before the Florists' club of Philadelphia are not new, and to my knowledge have been agitated for many years; in fact, as far back as I can remember the question has been brought up every little while by some one. This matter has been thrashed out so often that I feel that anything I might say would be of little consequence. Philadelphia, as usual, seems to have woke up long after all other cities. It is a condition that we all have to buck against and do the best we can.

ADVERTISING.

J. W. Hill, of Des Moines, president of the American Association of Nurserymen, in his address at Milwaukee last week, among other things, had the following to say which is applicable to all branches of the horticultural trades:

"I want to repeat, with greater emphasis, if possible, what my predecessor stated at our last session, regarding the necessity of giving greater publicity to our products through the medium of newspaper advertising. We are living in the greatest advertising age the country has ever known, as may be easily ascertained by closely examining the columns of our leading papers and magazines. The live, up-to-date nurseryman can ill afford to listlessly follow in beaten paths because they led his father to success, or to continue the methods that he himself, even, adopted ten years ago. We must adapt ourselves to new methods and the changed conditions brought about by this era of advertising.

"Select some good advertising mediums, which publish the truth, and which have the confidence of their readers; send them honest, truthful ads and let them know what you have to offer.

"Furnish your customer just what you agree to furnish, thus upholding the respectability and truthfulness of the journal or magazine, and at the same time realize the consciousness of having treated your patron right, and just as you stated you would in your advertisement.

"Honesty and truthfulness in advertising is the only policy which will endure."

THE RETAIL FLORIST.....

WEDDING BOUQUETS.

It is in the month of June that the average retail florist finds the widest scope for the exercise of his artistic talents, for wedding work is then most plentiful. No matter how unpretentious or how elaborate the wedding decoration may be, the flowers are sure to come in for critical inspection. Where the individuality of funeral flowers frequently is lost, not so with the stock used for weddings, and only the best of material can be used, affording opportunity for the display of each bloom so that its perfection will be apparent. In wedding work, too, there must be variety to give the bouquets and decorations distinctiveness—it will not do to have the flowers the same for wedding after wedding where many of the guests are likely to be present at each event.

It is for these reasons, as well as some others, that a particular interest attaches to illustrations of wedding decorations and bouquets; they afford an opportunity to study the work of others and to think out variations which may be employed on some similar orders. The accompanying illustrations are from photographs of some of the recent wedding bouquets of W. J. Palmer & Son, Buffalo, and are pleasing examples of their kind.

HOUSE DECORATING.

The Flowers for a Wedding.

After arranging the plants in the morning, make a note of what we will need to finish up our decoration. Of course, it is not always necessary to make a note on paper; a mental note will do, providing you have a memory you can trust. It puts one in a mean position when the time for the ceremony is near at hand and you must admit that you forgot this or that. I have always found it a good plan to inform the people of the house that I would not return with the flowers until a certain time. This will eliminate all cause for worry on the part of the bride-to-be and her people. Then see that you are on the job at the time set. Now, I know from experience that some of the above will sound like a waste of time, but I also know from experience that it is the little things that count.
